BLOODY CIVIL WAR FEARED

War Clouds Thickening In Rhodesia

By DAVID OTTAWAY
Washington Post

SALISBURY — Black and white leaders in Rhodesia have now set in motion a course of events that has a better than even chance of touching off the worst civil war in southern Africa's history, with a high potential for again drawing in all the outside forces that confronted each other in the Angolan conflict.

While no one here is giving very good odds on the survival of the new multiracial transitional government set up this week, most seem ready to bet heavily that the worst fighting in the six-year-old guerrilla war — which has already taken up to 9,000 lives — is about to break out. In addition, it is now taking on the character of a black-against-black struggle for power.

At stake is not only which black faction will rule the new Zimbabwe, but whether this minerally and agriculturally rich land will be socialist or capitalist, Eastern or Western, in orientation.

The war clouds are already thickening. Hundreds of Nationalist guerrillas are pouring in from Mozambique and Zambia to do battle against the transitional government. There are unconfirmed Rhodesian and South African reports of a new major buildup of Soviet arms and Cuban personnel in Mozambique, and the first indications that South Africa may be ready to step up its military assistance to Rhodesia.

The United States and Britain have launched an 11th-hour diplomatic offensive to persuade all of Rhodesia's warring and rival parties to attend one last peace conference. But none has shown interest, leaving the African "front-line" states and South Africa as the West's last hope for forcing a meeting of the nationalist leaders in the transition government and those outside the country.

This explains a sudden front-line summit meeting in Dar es Salaam announced for this weekend. The meeting was called after Tanzanian President Julius Nyerere met Tuesday with U.S. Ambassador Andrew Young, who is leading the Western peace initiative in southern Africa now and wants to use the occasion to meet informally with the five front-line presidents.

Meanwhile, the transitional government, under the combined leadership of white Prime Minister Ian Smith and three locally based black leaders, is about to launch a major campaign to win the hearts and minds of the 10,000 to 20,000 guerrillas fighting under the banner of the externally based Patriotic Front.

If the campaign succeeds, or even half succeeds, the transitional government should give birth to full black majority rule at the end of this year, almost certainly under the moderate pro-Western leadership of Bishop Abel Muzorewa.

Much now depends on this Methodist bishop, whose past political record of indecision and hiding in the face of crisis is the cause of much concern among his black and white supporters today. A respected religious and political leader among the

Israelis In State Of Shock

Times News Services

JERUSALEM — Israel is in a state of shock today following the sharp and open confrontation between U.S. President Jimmy Carter and Prime Minister Menachem Begin in Washington earlier in the week.

An uneasy sense that something fundamental is going seriously wrong pervaded the Israeli capital, affecting politicians and ordinary citizens alike.

Leading newspapers have called on the government to re-assess its policies and opposition leaders are reported planning to meet on whether to call for Begin's resignation.

The Democractic Movement for Change, which contributes 15 votes to Begin's governing Likud coalition in the Israeli parliament, or Knesset, also is expected to reassess its legislative support of Begin.

In Washington, U.S. State Secretary Cyrus Vance refused comment on the "internal affairs of Israel" but told reporters that the drive for a Middle East peace is "much slowed down."

Begin returning home from three day of talks with Carter Friday denied there was any crisis in his government.

Looking weary, he told an airport news conference: "I will do my best to put our house in order."

Asked about reports that the Carter administration wants him replaced by Defence Minister Ezer Weizman, a moderate, Begin said: "The prime minister of Israel is elected by the people of Israel, not by the diplomatic representatives of the United States."

In Cairo, the semi-official newspaper Al Ahram says Carter and President Anwar Sadat will have "urgent consultations" on steps to be taken in light of Begin's trip to Washington.

However, the authoritiative newspaper does not say whether the two leaders will meet in person or through their representatives.

Carter will be in Africa next week on an official visit.

U.S. Ambassador Hermann Eilts met with Sadat today for what the embassy said was a routine briefing on Begin's round of talks with Carter.

The United Nations, meanwhile, deployed hundreds of peacekeeping troops in southern Lebanon today and Syria dealt a potentially devastating blow to the Palestinian guerrilla movement by announcing that it was cutting off supplies of weapons and equipment and moving to halt any unauthorized military movements toward the Israeli-occupied border zone.

The move was seen as a strong sign Syria would cooperate with the international peacekeeping efforts.

More countries prepared to send in troops to build up the UN force to its proscribed 4,000 men.

By Friday, UN sources said about 25 per cent of the force had arrived, including 512 French, 259 Iranians, 250 Swedes and 11 Canadians.

UN officials said about 700 of the troops had already been deployed — the French near the southwest port of Tyre, the Iranians in the central section of the Israeli-Palestinian lines and the Swedes in the east.

The Palestine Liberation Organization said its forces had answered "heavy enemy shell and rocket fire" Friday on the south central town of Nabatiyeh, nine miles north of the Israeli border.

However, Western correspondents who toured the south reported general calm and said the four-day ceasefire in the area appeared to be generally holding.

Ransom Ambush Ends in Shootout

PARIS (UPI) — French police ambushed the kidnappers of industrialist Baron Edouard-Jean Empain near the pickup site for a record $8 million ransom Friday night and shot it out with them in the middle of an Easter holiday traffic jam.

One gangster was killed, another was slightly wounded and three escaped in the maze of cars. Two policemen also were hurt.

There was no sign of the 40-year-old baron, president of the $4.5 billion-a-year Empain-Schneider conglomerate. He was kidnapped Jan. 23 as he was driving to work from his Paris apartment.

A spokesman at Paris police headquarters said one of Empain's associates drove to a rendezvous to deliver a ransom of 17 million Swiss francs — $8 million — at a telephone booth along the crowded south Autoroute between Paris and Orly Airport.

Police were waiting in ambush and opened fire on the kidnappers when they arrived. But three of the five managed to escape in the confusion of the rush hour traffic, the spokesman said.

They did not get the ransom money — almost double the record amount paid out in a previous kidnapping.

Both the wounded gangster and his slain comrade were identified as members of the Paris underworld with long police records. This appeared to put an end to theories that the kidnappers were Italian professionals or German urban guerrillas.

The captured man was taken to police headquarters and was being interrogated today.

The police spokesman said the business associate parked his car next to the telephone booth as instructed and got out. Two men wearing hoods suddenly leapt from some nearby bushes, jumped into the car and sped off, police said.

They jerked to a halt about 500 yards up the highway, where three other kidnappers carrying submachineguns joined them.

At that point, the police closed in and shooting started.

It was not immediately clear whether Empain's family knew that police had learned of their plans to pay the ransom and had set a trap for the kidnappers.

Empain's elderly chauffeur, who was pistol-whipped in the June kidnapping, told police at the time that his boss disdained bodyguards, explaining, "He had no fear."

Empain himself once remarked, "I'm an optimist by nature."

Midwest Encased In Ice

United Press International

An Easter-weekend ice storm encased the Midwest in ice today, shutting down major highways, stranding motorists and halting air traffic at the world's busiest airport.

Ice toppled trees and snapped power lines across the storm area, plunging hundreds of thousands of people into darkness in several cities.

At least eight persons have been killed in the latest surge of bitter, wintry weather. Indiana, Oklahoma and Missouri each reported two storm deaths and Illinois and Iowa each reported one.

The storm pushed eastward, prompting travel advisories and storm warnings fo parts of Ohio, Pennsylvania and Maryland, where freezing rain and sleet hampered Easter travel.

Freezing rain, snow and high winds crippled Chicago, closing O'Hare International Airport — the world's busiest — stopping elevated trains and transforming expressways into ribbons of ice.

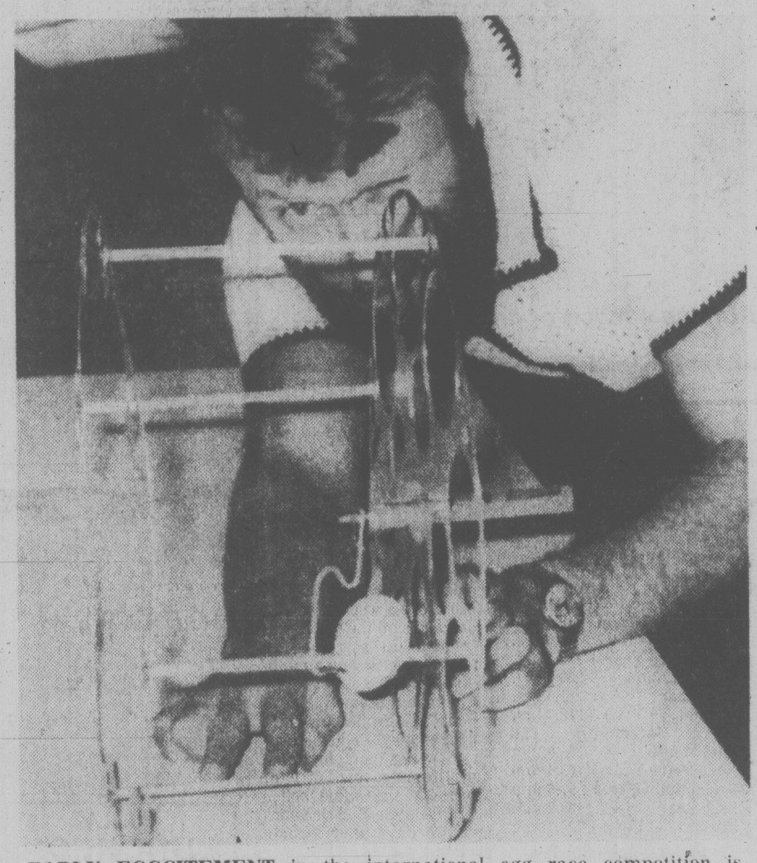
A thick glaze of ice covered runways at O'Hare Airport, forcing the huge air terminal to shut down for only the fourth time in its history.

One stretch off Interstate 57 on Chicago's South Side was closed. Police reported "hundreds" of accidents along one three-mile strip of highway. Authorities said as many as 50 cars were involved in one chain-reaction series of pileups.

Ice caused scattered power outages along Chicago Transit Authority elevated lines.

A winter storm warning was posted for Chicago and up to four inches of new snow was forecast.

Snow and ice spread over a wide swath off the midlands from Kansas City to Indianapolis.



EARLY EGGCITEMENT in the international egg race competition is created by Ron Miller of Maple Leaf, Ont., who set world record with distance of 130 metres with this contraption. Device, which is powered only by rubber band, rolls along flat surface powered by weight of the egg. Victoria will have its egg race April 15 and local inventors, hopefully, will come up with devices that will break Miller's record.

Marsha Given Chance

Marsha Mason rounds out the field in the race for the Oscar for best actress this year.

Most Hollywood observers rate her fourth or fifth out of five candidates but they add the vote will be so close it would not be a big upset if she won.

The Times and CJVI are offering a chance on a weekend for two in Hollywood plus 10 runner-up prizes for those correctly predicting the Academy Award winners as announced on April 3. Official entry form and more information will be found today on page 37.

Marsha Mason was nominated for her performance opposite Richard Dreyfuss in Goodbye Girl. Dreyfuss is a major contender for best actor and many critics believe his performance was the outstanding element in the movie.

The Goodbye Girl was given five nominations, including one to child star Quinn Cummings as best supporting actress. It was also nominated best picture and best screenplay.

While Mason's performance was not rated as sensational, the movie was jointly released by MGM and Warner Bros., which puts a lot of potential Academy votes behind it. The race is expected to be very close.

Blaze Guts Sumas Block

Victoria firemen are trying to determine the cause of a fire that broke out in a commercial building in the 400 block Sumas Friday causing more than $100,000 damage.

Seven businesses with offices in the single storey building were damaged in the blaze, reported by nearby residents at 1.42 p.m.

Fire investigator Lt. Alec Satchwell said two of the businesses — Copytron, a supplier of copy machines, and Pacific Controls, a supplier of heating and air-conditioner control devices — were gutted.

The other five businesses, Totem Welding, National Cash Registers, Orion Products, Bob's Appliances and Dendco, a dentist supply firm, had smoke and water damage.

Satchwell said the fire was so extensive it is difficult to pinpoint exactly where it started.

Meanwhile Central Saanich police are investigating the death of a 60-year-old man whose badly burned body was discovered Thursday lying across the fireplace hearth in his home at 7313 Veyaness.

NO SMALL CHANGE IN METER CAPER

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Nine employees who collect coins from San Francisco's parking meters and their supervisor have been accused of stealing at least $3 million in coins during a six-year period.

Six other employees of the 17-member department were booked for investigation of embezzlement by working only four hours a day, although they were paid full-time salaries.

The only department employee not booked Friday was one who had been working there only five weeks.

District Attorney Joseph Freitas said Melvin Wilson, 38, supervisor of the crews that emptied the meters, is believed to have carted home $1,000 a day himself "when he worked."

Among the 10 employees booked for investigation of pocketing meter money was one who an assistant district attorney said is believed to have taken $60,000 to $80,000 a year.

Freitas estimated the workers' illicit take from the meters was at least $500,000 annually, about 25 per cent of all the coins fed into them each year.

He said some of those arrested "were in the habit of taking a handful of coins from the piles in the sorting room at city hall" while others took sackfuls home.

Freitas said the scheme allowed employees to buy "some pretty grand cars" despite annual salaries of $10,000 to $15,000 a year.

Bikini Islanders Being Chased out Again

By WALTER PINCUS
Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Nine years ago, the U.S. government told the Bikini Islanders it was safe to return to their atoll, once the site of nuclear weapons tests in the Pacific. And some of the islanders went home.

Now the government has found that it was wrong. According to tests last year, the ground water in Bikini is still too radioactive for human consumption.

So are coconuts and fruits and vegetables grown in the still contaminated soil.

So the Interior Department quietly has asked Congress for $15 million to move the islanders to another home.

"It is now clear," Interior told a Houses representative appropriations subcommittee, "that for the forseeable future the island of Bikini in the atoll should not be used for agricultural purposes, particularly for local consumption, and should not be considered a residential area."

The approximately 100 Bikinians now living on the island "are being carefully monitored," Interior said. "A feeding program has been provided for them and they are not consuming locally-grown food."

Higher than normal concentrations of radioactive elements taken into the human body in food or water over long periods have been associated with the occurrence of leukemia and other cancers.

None of the present Bikini residents, according to Interior officials, appears yet to have become ill from living on the island.

Nonetheless, the Bikini situation will take place as part of the continuing controversy among scientists both inside and outside the government on the long-term health effects of low-level radiation.

It has further significance: the high residual radiation levels in the soil, and its uptake by plants 23 years after exposure, may influence military planners as they explore the prospects of using tactical nuclear weapons in even a limited manner in western Europe.

Interior officials who manage the U.S. Trust Territory in the South Pacific, which includes Bikini, are asking congress for $6 million in fiscal 1979 to begin a proposed new $15 million program to try again to relocate the Bikinians who were moved off their atoll to make way for the nuclear weapons tests.

Some $3 million has already been spent on bringing them back to Bikini.

The entire island was plowed up, topsoil removed, 50,000 new coconut trees planted and 40 new homes built.

"All that will be abandoned," Ruth Van Cleve, Interior's director of territorial affairs, said today.

Tanker Breaks In Two

BREST, France (AP) — The U.S.-owned oil supertanker Amoco Cadiz, wrecked on the rocks off the Brittany coast, broke in two Friday under the pounding of heavy seas and was expected to break up completely during the weekend.

Large quantities of the remaining oil aboard, estimated at 10.3 million gallons, continued to pour into the sea. Experts who studied the wreck from a helicopter said the ship is losing oil at an increasing rate and the long forward section containing the oil tanks is settling aft, poking the bow into the air as waves crash into the exposed bulkheads and through the breeched tanks.

The $12-million tanker split nearly in two within hours of running aground March 16, but until Friday it had held together on the port side.

Goverment officials said all efforts to pump out the remaining oil will continue until it is certain the tanker is empty. Those efforts have been frustrated since Sunday by gales.

Aerial surveys showed the bulk of the pollution from the 54 million gallons known to have spilled remain concentrated along about 96 kilometres miles of the northern Brittany coast east of the wreck.

The cleanup is to begin Tuesday, two days after the high spring tides recede.

With the consent of French authorities, a commercial radio station that broadcasts over most of France, Europe No. 1, started the appeal for help. People in dozens of towns showed up at city halls with heavy rubber gloves, thigh boots, slickers, garbage cans, buckets, shovels, rakes and rags.

New Snag for Miners

WASHINGTON (AP) — Almost 16 weeks after going on strike, 160,000 U.S. miners are preparing to return to work Monday under a new contract. But a related labor dispute threatens to delay the reopening of some mines.

Voting from Appalachia to the Rockies, miners gave their approval to the new contract on Friday, the 109th day of a walkout that threatened power supplies throughout the Midwest and resulted in thousands of layoffs.

"I feel pretty good," President Arnold Miller of the United Mine Workers said after announcing the ratification. Miller and Joseph Brennan, president of the Bituminous Coal Operators Association, planned to sign the accord today.

With 655 of 719 UMW locals reporting, the union said 55,726 miners, or 57 per cent, voted in favor of the accord and 42,391, or 43 per cent, voted against it.

Miller, who had to negotiate three tentative agreements with the soft-coal industry before he could sell one to his union, said he expects most miners to return to work Monday.

Some pits may be picketed next week by striking mine construction workers, who still are without a contract.

Bargainers for the UMW and Association of Bituminous Contractors are meeting this weekend to negotiate an accord covering about 10,000 construction workers.

Although Friday's ratification is expected to speed up those talks, both sides say they remain apart on several major issues and do not expect to reach an agreement until sometime next week at the earliest.

Union miners are considered unlikely to cross any picket lines that might be thrown up by construction workers on Monday. In 1974, construction workers prolonged a three-week nationwide strike for another two weeks by picketing at several of the country's largest mines.

"Our miners won't cross a one-man picket line," said James Russell, a union official in Ohio. "So, if there is no settlement between mine operators and mine construction workers and they picket, the miners won't work."

"No one goes back until everyone goes back," said John Samuels, a UMW official in Illinois.

The contract increases miners' wages by $2.40 an hour during three years. Miners now receive an average of $7.80 an hour. It also would require miners to pay up to $200 a year for drug and doctor expenses fully covered in the past.

The new contract is stripped of a provision that would have permitted coal companies to fire leaders of wildcat strikes. It also contains improved pension benefits, but maintains a dual pension system that gives recent retirees bigger cheques than those who retired before 1976.

Unstable air over the province will result in showery conditions today and shallow Arctic air in the northern and central interior will result in flurries. Ridging behind this next system will result in improvement on Sunday and sunny conditions by Monday.

Moro Captors Write

ROME (UPI) — The Red Brigades terrorists who kidnapped former Premier Aldo Moro broke a week of silence today and said they were trying him on proletarian charges of setting up a multinational "police state."

The gang broke their silence on Moro's March 16 kidnapping by sending a leaflet to newspapers in Rome and the northern city of Turin. The last time police heard from the Red Brigades was two days after the abduction.

Meanwhile, gunmen shot and wounded a former Turin mayor in a street ambush Friday and a telephone caller said it was a new strike by the terrorist Red Brigades.

The latest victim was Giovanni Picco, 46, architect and an official of the Christian Democratic party, of which Moro is president.

"This is the Red Brigades," the male caller told an Italian news agency. "We have hit Giovanni Picco. A communique will follow."

Gypsies Depart for Winnipeg Leaving Debts and a Quandary

VANCOUVER (CP) — The band of 32 gypsies that became a subject of contention between the federal and British Columbia governments has set off for Winnipeg, leaving behind an unpaid motel bill of more than $2,500.

No one but the gypsies knows why they set off for the Manitoba capital

"It will be interesting to see what happens when they arrive," their lawyer, John Taylor, said.

The gypsies arrived here March 6 in five cars after travelling from Montreal via the United States. The group, members of the Sadinovios and Petrov families — originally from Yugoslavia, includes 15 children under the age of 10, a pregnant woman and a 61-year-old man with a heart condition.

The federal government last week turned down the gypsies' August, 1977 application for refugee status in Canada. The department said the group will be "advised in due course of the time and place for further action."

An immigration spokesman said a department inquiry will be convened shortly to decide if the group came into Canada legally when most of them arrived in Montreal from France two years ago.

Meanwhile, Sukhchain Gill, owner of the Deluxe Motel, is wondering who will pay the gypsies' $2,520 hotel bill for 14 days' accommodation.

The provincial government has said the group is a federal responsibility but the federal government has not agreed to provide financial assistance.

The gypsies' cars were impounded for insurance and customs infractions but the group was later able to deliver payment to retrieve one of the cars.

Taylor said the group then acquired three more vehicles. Part of their luggage will have to be sent by rail to Winnipeg because of an overloading problem.

Gill said he is going to "take a good rest" before finding out what he can do about his money.

He said the worst aspect of housing the large group of people was "so many kids running around all over the place."

2 Senate Tories Not Enough: Joe

By KEN POLE
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — Two progressive Conservatives were among the seven Senate appointments announced by Prime Minister Trudeau this week, but Opposition Joe Clark says the government isn't living up to a promise made more than seven years ago to appoint more Tory Senators.

The appointments, which included National Revenue Minister Joe Guay, who remains in the cabinet, brought the standings in Parliament's upper house to 76 Liberals, 16 Tories, two Independents, one Independent Liberal and one Social Creditern There still are eight vacancies.

As well as the 62-year-old Guay, the other Liberals appointed Thursday afternoon by Trudeau were Stanley Haidasz, 55, a Toronto MP who was in the cabinet for only a year as minister of multiculturalism in 1972-73; Florence Bird, 70, a Philadelphia native who now lives in Ottawa and who is a former chairman of the royal commission on the status of women; Derek Lewis, 53, a Newfoundland lawyer who once was secretary of the Liberal Party of Canada; and Margaret Anderson, whose age is unavailable, a former president of the New Brunswick Liberal Women's Association and also a daughter of a former provincial cabinet minister.

The two Tory appointees were Duff Roblin, 60, premier of Manitoba from 1958 to 1967 and an unsuccessful federal candidate; and Jack Marshall, 58, MP for the Newfoundland riding of Humber-St. Geroge's-Ste. Barbe since 1972.

Under the British North America Act, Senators originally were appointed for life. Nowadays, however, any appointed after June 2, 1965, must retire at the age of 75.

While Clark welcomed the appointment of both Roblin and Marshall, despite the fact he wasn't consulted about the latter, he contends that Trudeau has not lived up to a commitment given in October, 1970, that life-term Tory Senators who retired would be filled by Conservatives.

"Between March and April of 1971," Clark states, "five lifetenure P.C. Senators resigned ... yet none was replaced."

What's more, he says, the government has changed the rules at least three times, the latest being in February, 1975, when Ray Perrault, government leader in the Senate, said the offer no longer included Senators who died in office.

Clark, during a recent discussion with Trudeau about Senate appointments — worth about $33,000 a year in salary and tax-free expenses — brought up the 10 or more Tory vacancies in the upper house. This week's announcement of two is the first response.

Trudeau has never moved quickly on Senate appointments as an examination of the record shows.

Guay's appointment, for example, fills a vacancy created by the death of Olive Irvine in 1969. Haidasz' appointment fills one created by the resignation of John Aird in 1974.

The vacancies that remain include two in New Brunswick and one each in Alberta, Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, Quebec and Saskatchewan. The Saskatchewan seat has been vacant since 1971.

Sierra Rakes Logging

Sierra Club vice-chairman Jim Bonfonti has accused Recreation and Conservation Minister Sam Bawlf of irresponsiblity in the Akamina-Kishinena wildernesss valley issue.

The valley, next to Waterton and Glacier International Peace Parks in the southeast corner of B.C., has been the centre of controversy since Forests Minister Tom Waterland approved logging in the area last November.

The area was designated as a recreational area in the 1950s.

Both the federal and the U.S. governments have expressed concern that logging the valley will have serious detrimental effects on the two adjacent parks.

The Sierra Club and biologists have demanded the area be retained as a wilderness site.

Bonfonti said environmental assesssments of the valley were made by Bawlf's ministry but the minister has refused to released the information.

He said environmental assessments are released in other provinces but Bawlf has refused to follow this procedure.

"The Sierra Club believes the minister is deliberately withholding information on the nature and extent of adverse environmental impact," he said.

"The minister is fearful of public reaction if the rationale bebind his secret decision-making is' brought into an open and public environmental assessment and review process.

"Surely the people of B.C. have the right to know the nature and extent of adverse impact which may result from the proposed development plans," he said.

CUPW Quits Grieve Meet

HALIFAX (CP) — Representatives of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers walked out of a meeting organized by the post office to hear 1,284 union grievances here.

CUPW officials contended that the post office nominee on the grievance committee lacked authority to deal with the grievances, a charge the post office has repeatedly denied.

D. W. Tingley, national CUPW director in the Atlantic region, said in a statement that Jack Cochrane, regional general manager for the postal service, was barring the union from its right to have the grievances heard.

CUPW has said that only Cochrane is in a position to hear the grievances and his presence at the grievance committee meetings is required by the union's contract with the post office.

However, the post office has said in the past that under the contract Cochrane can designate someone to sit in for him at such meetings.

BAWLF ORDERS HALT TO FALCON HARVEST

No permits will be issued for the capture of Peregrine Falcons from the Queen Charlotte Islands this year, Recreation and Conservation Minister Sam Bawlf said today.

"I am not allowing the harvest. There are many people who do not want to have those birds molested and until I am convinced that a harvest is necessary I will not allow it," he said.

There are estimated to be about 100 pairs of the Peale's sub-species of the Peregrine falcons in B.C. with most living on the Queen Charlotte Islands. There are in addition about 500 pairs in Alaska.

In a press release, Bawlf said the sub-species is the only one in North America not considered threatened or endangered.

Cambridge Crew Swamped

LONDON (AP) — The Cambridge rowing eight foundered in the rough water of the Thames today and Oxford coasted to an easy victory in one of the most dramatic varsity boat races in 150 years.

Oxford appeared to be a clear winner as the crews came under Barnes Bridge, less than one mile from the finish of the 4¼-mile course.

Then came the drama.

Cambridge rowed frantically in a bid to close a gap of 2½ lengths and started to ship water. Within seconds the Cambridge shell disappeared beneath the white-topped waves and thousands of spectators on the river banks watched the crew struggle in the water.

Rescue craft soon pulled the eight men and cox to safety.

"We saw Cambridge was in trouble and we just gritted our teeth and kept going," said Al Shealy, the former Harvard star from Woodbury, Conn., who bolstered the middle of the Oxford crew. "It was pretty tough going out there."

It was the fifth sinking since the famous race was first rowed in 1829. Previous duckings were suffered by Cambridge in 1859, Cambridge and Oxford together in 1912, and Oxford in 1925 and 1951.

Contaminated Oil Nets Jail Term

TOKYO (AP) — A former chief of a cooking-oil plant was sentenced today to 18 months in prison for negligence that affected thousands of consumers.

The Kanemi plant marketed oil contaminated with polychlorinated biphenyl (PCB) in western Japan 10 years ago. Thousands who consumed the oil complained of nervous or intestinal disorders.

Judge Hiroshi Terasaka said Yoshito Morimoto remodelled the deordorization pipes in his plant at his own discretion and used the production process for about four years without proper checks, allowing a PCB-containing catalyzer to erode the pipes and seep into rice-oil vessels.

The same court has ordered that Kanemi and Kanegafuchi Chemical Co., which supplied the PCB, to pay compensation totalling $25 million to 729 persons poisoned by the oil.

Rose-colored Glasses

Prime Minister Trudeau's genteel, optimistic overview of Canadian affairs for an audience of American business leaders in New York this week sounded as much like a rehearsal of his re-election strategy as the reassurance to U.S. business it was billed as.

As a political speech it was no generator of great enthusiasms, and certainly did not warrant the massive press coverage devoted to it — live broadcast on both Canadian television networks, a large contingent of reporters assigned to the job, decorous question-and-answer session by two U.S. reporters from Time and The New York Times.

The election role Trudeau tried out in New York was as the serious, philosophical academic, as opposed to the argumentative, partisan stump speaker which got rave reviews at the Liberals' convention in Ottawa a few weeks ago.

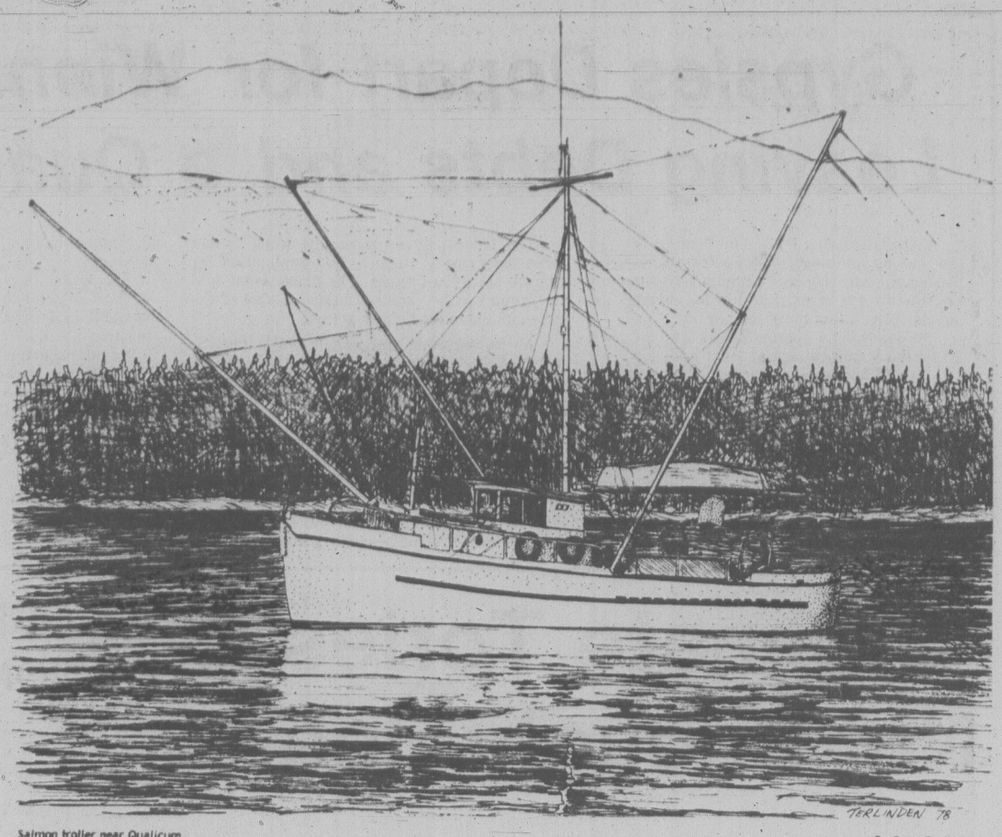
Yes, Canada's encountered a spot of trouble or two, but not to worry, the country is in good hands, he told the New York bankers. The economy? Well, the rest of the world suffered a recession in the mid-1970s but Canada (to the certain amazement of Statistics Canada) just forged ahead, a bit slower than normal, mind you, but forward progress nonetheless.

Wage and price increases are under control (inflation is still running at nine per cent), government spending has been reined in — a slight acknowledgement of failure here, Ottawa erred but only in moving "too far, too fast" — and the precipitous drop of the Canadian dollar in relation to the American dollar has only improved our competitive trade position. The Liberals have new policies, soon to be announced, to further improve the Canadian economy.

Quebec and Levesque? "I am confident that the people of Quebec, when the choice is finally put, will reject an ethnocentric nationalism in favor of a renewed and more productive relationship with their fellow Canadians."

He told the bankers, in other words, that inflation has been wrestled to the ground and separatism is dead. Excessive pessimism wins no votes, but Trudeau's rather rosy portrayal of the Canadian economy erred wildly in the other direction.

Maybe New York loved it, but it won't play for long at home.



Salmon troller near Qualicum — By Rene Terlinden

Who's In Charge Here?

Who speaks for the government?

That's becoming the question again on the provincial scene as Forests Minister Tom Waterland (who never has understood the principle of cabinet solidarity too well) and Recreation Minister Sam Bawlf are coming into public conflict over the question of whether there should be any more parks carved out of forested land in B.C.

The brouhaha began when Waterland's top civil servant, Chief Forester Ted Young, delivered a speech in Montreal in which he stated that B.C. cannot afford to alienate any more forest land for park use. We already have quite enough parks and those plus wild land that isn't much good for forestry anyway should see the province through until the millenium, Young implied.

The head of the parks branch, Bob Ahrens, naturally disagreed, and within days the dispute had reached the ministerial level.

Waterland says he approved Young's speech, has expressed the same sentiment himself previously, and still believes that in order to keep B.C.'s forest industry productive, we cannot afford to set aside any more good forested land.

Bawlf meanwhile says that the idea "is not my view of the future, short or long term, nor is it the view of my ministry or the government."

How interesting, both for those involved in the forest industry who support Waterland's idea and want to keep all forests for forestry, and for those conservationists and environmentalists who are working for new parks to preserve certain unique areas of B.C. and to provide places for the public to enjoy the great outdoors! Shall we now take bets on whether the government plans to stop creating parks or not?

On the basis of previous record, it would probably be best to put one's money on Bawlf. Waterland got himself into a similar situation a little less than a year ago when he was determined to spray insecticides on the spruce budworm, a program not enthusiastically endorsed by the environment ministry. The environment ministry won, and Waterland came away looking silly.

The real problem with these interministerial games, however, is that the public is the loser. If the public knows that the government has a policy on a certain issue, they can deal with it, work within it, or work to change it as they see fit.

But if one minister is saying one thing and another minister is saying another, they are left in a state of confusion. They don't know what the government policy is (or, indeed, if there is a policy at all), so they can't plan their actions accordingly.

Premier Bennett should announce, quickly and clearly, a government policy on the creation of new parks in forested areas. And the next thing he should do is explain to his ministers that they should hammer out their disagreements in the cabinet room, not in Montreal speeches or in the public press.

RICHARD GWYN

Why Are We So Skeptical?

OTTAWA — At one of his recent press conferences, Prime Minister Trudeau worried that Canadians are too "skeptical" about their government. Certainly this skepticism exists. Mistrust of government is widespread, and it is deep. The issue is whether this skepticism is in fact justified or whether instead it is just a self-indulgent, and hence a socially destructive, cynicism.

The story that follows is taken from a study just published by Science Council researcher Robert Gibson into the bureaucratic and political decision-making process that led, late in 1976, to the opening of a $60 million lead-zinc mine at Strathcona Sound on Baffin Island.

Because Inuit are involved, this story has a particular intensity. In its essentials, though, this chronicle of the decision-making process applies to each and every comparable government project. Think of Pickering airport. Think, if you can bear to, of Mirabel airport.

As It Really Works

The Strathcona Sound project is available as a case example of government-as-it-really-works for two reasons. First, the Science Council, which has blossomed into Ottawa's liveliest and most ambitious think tank, assigned Gibson to examine the role played by the environmental and social sciences in the planning of the Strathcona mine. Second, a copy of the confidential cabinet document about the project ended up in the office of the community council of nearby Arctic Bay (population 500), perhaps sent there by accident, sent illegally perhaps by one of Justice Minister Ron Basford's "cowardly" civil servants.

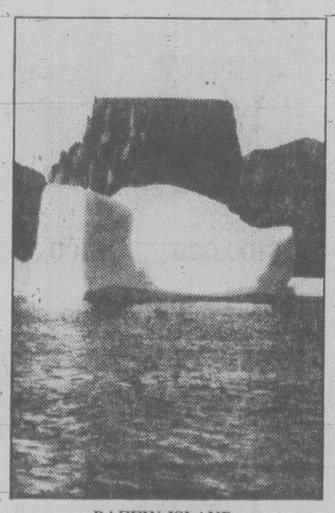
The existence of lead and zinc at Strathcona Sound has been known since 1910. By the early 1970s, development had become possible, both because Ottawa was anxious to create "wage" jobs for an expanding Inuit population, and because relatively high ore prices made a subsidized mine marginally profitable.

On June 18, 1974, then-northern affairs minister Jean Chretien announced that Ottawa and Mineral Resources International of Calgary had signed an agreement to develop the mine. The internal decision-making that led up to this announcement, writes Gibson, "contradicted stated government policy . . . failed to ensure meaningful consultations with the people to be affected . . . proceeded without a thorough assessment of social impact . . . failed to carry out an environmental impact assessment."

Three examples, to justify Gibson's indictment:

□ On March 26, 1974, then energy and mines minister Donald Macdonald announced that "the first priority in mineral policy" would be to upgrade the processing of ore in Canada, in order to "diversify the economy". Just two days later cabinet approved $17 million in subsidies to the Strathcona mine even though 100 per cent of the ore was to be (and today still is) exported raw, to West Germany, Holland and New Jersey.

□ Shortly before planning of the Strathcona project began, Chretien, in March, 1972, published a "new policy" of northern development. "The needs of the people of the north," declared Chretien, "are more important than resource development." Chretien ranked nonrenewable resource development, like a mine, fourth in priority, behind social concerns, the environment and renewable resources, like fish and game. Strathcona Sound, Chretien's first major project initiated since his new policy guidelines, reversed his own order of priorities, and transferred the department's funds from people to resource development.



BAFFIN ISLAND
. . . Inuit were ignored

□ Following Chretien's announcement, then-Indian Affairs assistant deputy minister Digby Hunt told a Commons committee in October, 1974, that during the planning there had been "extensive consultations with the people . . . The community council (of Arctic Bay) was made fully aware of the potential of the mine." Arctic Bay council expressed its views in a formal letter of protest written in March, 1975. It had been "duped", the council declared; it had had to insist on being consulted; the information eventually provided had been on numerous matters of small importance, but rarely on anything of consequence. Specially, the council protested that its cardinal concern — that Inuit miners remain in Arctic Bay rather than be moved to a new, white-dominated townsite at Strathcona — had been ignored.

Besides views of the Arctic Bay council, the cabinet and the Indian Affairs department and the Northwest Territories territorial government ignored repeated requests by junior officials that social and environmental studies be undertaken before the decision was taken.

Why? The promise that Inuit would fill 60 per cent of the mine jobs, for one reason. Excitement at being involved in the creation of Canada's most northerly mine, for another. Lastly, fear that planning delays might abort the project.

Land Claims Issue

"Future (Inuit) attitudes toward the project," stated the secret 1974 cabinet document, "could be influenced by the land claims issue" — meaning that once the Inuit realized the land might be theirs, they might reject the mine in its entirety.

Was the Strathcona omelet in the end worth all the eggs broken to make it? Here is today's state of affairs: of 190 mine employees, 39 are Inuit; total government spending has jumped from an estimated $17 million to $23 million; in competition with Arctic Bay, a white townsite is being built at Strathcona; lastly, because of low lead and zinc prices the mine may close, or at best will have to foreshorten its planned 12-year life by high-grading the ore.

One final fact about today's state of affairs: Trudeau was right to say Canadians are "skeptical." He was wrong, though, not to add the corollary, which is that Canadians are right to be skeptical.

Royal Oak Public Hearing: Democracy Still Works

They've had trouble with democracy in Saanich the past year or two, ("they" being both elected and appointed officials). They've had trouble knowing how to deal with the public pressure groups that have appeared apparently out of nowhere; they've had trouble figuring out who can have access to what kinds of information and how; they've had trouble coping with serious conflicts of ideology and personality that have emerged from within the council itself.

Wednesday night they proved to their municipality that democracy can still work — and work very well — in Saanich.

The occasion was the final, formal public hearing on the question of whether the municipality should rezone some 80 acres of land in the Royal Oak area so it could be turned into a light industrial park. The issue is undoubtedly one of the two most controversial in the municipality (the other being whether a giant shopping centre should be built in the Broadmead area). It has drifted across the municipality's collective consciousness on and off for the past decade. It has been the subject of numerous studies, numerous petitions and numerous debates.

Wednesday's meeting was scheduled as the last debate, and more than 300 people crowded into the auditorium of the Garth Homer achievement centre for the event. The auditorium is, incidentally, an excellent place to hold such a hearing. It is bright, airy and roomy; there is lots of space to hang maps and charts and it can accommodate a sophisticated sound system so that, despite the size of the crowd, everyone could easily hear all that was said. It was far better than either council chambers or the high school auditoriums that councils often tend to rent for these occasions.

Mayor Mel Couvelier, who runs a good meeting, explained the ground rules: all those in favor of the park would speak first, then all those against, then anybody else who had anything to say; because of the number of people wanting to speak, the aldermen would not ask each participant questions; neither, except in unusual cases could the speakers ask questions of council members or staff, or get into a debate with them.

The rules worked well. The crowd remained polite and well-behaved throughout the four-hour meeting. Applause on both sides was restrained; there was virtually no heckling or booing. The group might have been attending a concert or play rather than an emotional political event. The odd member of the audience fell asleep as speakers covered the same ground repeatedly and, in many cases, drowned the audience in wave after wave of statistics.

The arguments of those in favor of the park (a few local residents with a petition saying they represented hundreds more, representatives of such groups as the Chamber of Commerce, Housing and Urban Development Association, real estate board and labor council) were all much of a sameness. They cited reams of statistics to show that the park would ease Victoria's serious unemployment problems and would improve Saanich's tax base so ordinary homeowners would not have such trouble with tax increases.

The arguments against the park were more varied. Some speakers questioned the viability of the park with an equal number of statistics; more spoke in somewhat emotional terms about their fears of the destruction of their neighborhood. They were not, as a group, as articulate as those in favor (although the Royal Oak Community Association displayed a considerable flair for the dramatic with a 750-foot long petition and a couple of excellent one-liners) but their sincerity was patently obvious.

As the presentations went on, there were some fears that the whole exercise might be nothing but a charade. The council members sat silent and impassive, their faces as expressionless as the statues carved from rock at Mount Rushmore. Perhaps, some people thought, they had made up their minds already and were going through the motions only to satisfy the requirements of the Municipal Act which insists on a public hearing before such a rezoning.

But when the speeches were finally over and it came time for council to make a decision, it was clear this was not the case. Alderman after alderman noted the impressiveness of the arguments on both sides; several commented it was the most difficult decision they had had to make since taking office.

Best of all, the aldermen were able to put aside their political gamesplaying and their own petty feuds and outline their decisions and the reasons for them with calm logic, a commodity that is not generally found on the council in overabundance. Even Ald. John Mika, normally the prickliest of council members, managed to explain his position with only a couple of digs at opposition aldermen.

Would that council could carry this spirit through into all their deliberations! — B.McL.

'To Hell with 'Em'

Re an article in the Times, March 10: Accept Quebec Drive Launched by 'Loyal' Legion:

Right here is one member of the Royal Canadian Legion, a member for 37 years and came out of France on a stretcher in 1918, who says: "To hell with Quebec." Let them separate and if Canada can't survive without them Canada isn't what it should be.

Who is this Gordon Stringer who is going to travel across Canada spreading the message? Who is paying his expenses? "About 50 executives discussed the campaign." What about the other 1,500 executives? "There must be concessions on both sides." Baloney! Quebec is, and has been, a festering sore and the best remedy is to excise it.

Rene Levesque is to be admired. He is not trying to sell us a bum bill of goods. He knows what he and his fellow Canadiens want, and is man enough to say so. His native and official language is French but he is not trying to ram it down our throats. He wants it in Quebec, and that is where it should be kept. If Quebecois want to talk to the rest of Canada they can do as others do, speak Canadian.

Too bad Trudeau couldn't be as straight a shooter as Levesque instead of the devious conniving sidewinder he is. — S. J. Carr, Tete Jaune, B.C.

True Crisis

The article entitled Population Explosion a Fizzle? in the March 15 Times contained some astounding statements. Surely a tripling of the world's population in the next 100 years is an "explosion"? Where are we going to get the food to feed the eight billion extra mouths, when we can barely feed the planet's population now? Where are we going to find the vast reserves of petroleum needed for fertilizer and energy? If growth to 12 billion people by the year 2075 is an optimistic prediction, heaven help us. International peace cannot be maintained with only four billion people on this planet.

The author of the article is grasping at straws. Problems related to the size of the population of this planet already surround us, including rapid exhaustion of the world's petroleum reserves, depletion of many species of fish, changes in the planet's carbon cycle, and a $200 billion dollar debt load in the Third World.

The growth of the human population on this planet is a true crisis. Let's not forget it. — Fraser Homer-Dixon, 105-2056 Oak Bay Avenue.

It Was Great

Someone has said "a little knowledge is a dangerous thing." This thought came to mind as I read the article in the Times of March 7 (Orchestra Up and Down), dealing with the recent concerts of the Victoria Symphony.

Your critic, who modestly withholds identification, says of the Sunday concert: "In this season the orchestra has not achieved a greater degree of precision, better attack, more satisfactory intonation" but that for Monday's concert the orchestra "had become unglued. Among the winds, split notes, insecure timing, unprecise attack and on the whole a performance without lustre."

I was there for Monday's concert, and I thought it was the best I had ever heard from the Victoria symphony, and I have heard them all for at least 10 years. So did a number of people with whom I have discussed it. It seems evident that I don't know enough about music to know how bad it was. How fortunate I am that because of my ignorance, I can enjoy the many treats that are available in Victoria. In my opinion Monday's concert was superb. I do hope the players do not take your critic too seriously. — L. Austin Wright, Victoria.

A Job Well Done

On Feb. 12, I had the misfortune of suffering a fractured leg while playing a game of rugby.

During subsequent events, I had the good fortune to be situated in the capable care of the hospital staff of the Royal Jubilee Hospital (Ward—3 Royal).

My purpose in writing this letter is to thank the nursing and hospital staff on the 3 Royal Ward of the Royal Jubilee Hospital for the exceptional care which I received while I was hospitalized on their ward.

In light of our society's over-infatuation with negativity, I would like to counter this trend by stating to all those directly and indirectly involved with the operation of the Royal Jubilee Hospital:

Thank you for a job well done. — Robert A. Long, Campbell River.

Comedians

I am writing to you to congratulate you on your fine and perceptive editorial on Comedians. It was written with a clarity that helped the community receive the play in an intelligent fashion.

Your attention to this production of Bastion Theatre was appreciated not only by our staff but also by the many people in Victoria who have worked to make the theatre an integral part of our community. — Eric Macdonald, General Manager, Bastion Theatre Company.

In Days When the 'Oil of Civility' Flowed Freely

"That courtier was in the right, who dated the commencement of the French Revolution from the day when a nobleman appeared at Versailles without buckles in his shoes."
—"The Complete Handbook of Etiquette for Ladies and Gentlemen."

By ISRAEL SHENKER
New York Times

That superior view of social standing was common in the 19th century. Etiquette dictated intricate rules, delicate observances, sensible cautions and stifling demands. Woe to the parvenu who challenged what authorities called "the power of littles."

Many of the strictures have been overpowered by the permissiveness that leaves contemporary society without the shield and buckler of polite observance. But those who would recover the legacy of mannered decorum may do so in the etiquette collection of the Arthur and Elizabeth Schlesinger Library at Radcliffe College.

Most of these books were in the library of Dr. Schlesinger, a Harvard professor, who donated them before his death in 1965.

Good manners may have begun as expressions of submission by the weak to the strong, or as propitiatory gestures toward religious authority; in the 19th century, courteous behavior was described as "little morals," "shadows of virtues," "the outward expression of the most generous impulses of the heart" and "the oil of civility." "High birth and good breeding are the privileges of the few," one authority wrote, "but the habits and manners of a gentleman may be acquired by all." (Cardinal Newman characterized a gentleman as one who never inflicts pain; Oscar Wilde added the adverb "unintentionally.")

The elementary rules of good breeding were those imported from England, with a polished veneer from France. As America grew and prospered, authorities grudgingly allowed for modifications to suit frontier conditions, local temperaments and even the occasional democratic impulse. But fundamental dictates of courtesy — "a gentleman will not insult me; none other can" — were enshrined as ritual observance.

A gentleman never takes a lady's hand unless it is offered, John H. Young warned in "Our Deportment" (1881). "He has even less right to pinch or retain it." Another author complained that "there are some Americans (who) will seize your hand in spite of you, and visit it pretty roughly before you recover it."

Only the maladroit would introduce friends and acquaintances to everyone they met. "Such promiscuous introductions," Young wrote, "are neither necessary, desirable, nor at all times agreeable." He inveighed against addressing mere acquaintances by their first name.

The Rev. James Porter, author of "Hints to Young Ladies who are Dependent on their own Exertions," sought the golden mean, and therefore advised against extremes of laughter ("The occurrence of a contingency calculated to excite the risibles of the company, should be concealed") and of anger ("a sin"). Lord Chesterfield, patron saint of the century's lifted pinkie devotions, had earlier approved of smiling, but he frowned on laughter.

Anyone who employed profanity in the drawing room forever relinquished all pretensions to good breeding. Keep a civil tongue, one authority advised, if you expect to entertain angels unaware. Shun exclamations, counseled an expert, warning against the vulgarity of expostulations such as "Good gracious!" "Mercy!" and "Dear me!"

"Avoid gossip," Cecil B. Hartley urged in his 1860 work on gentlemen's etiquette. "In a woman it is detestable. But in a man it is utterly despicable."

A representative inventory of the reprehensible included: slang, classical quotations (especially in the presence of ladies), loud speech, whispering in society, endless witticisms, unfamiliar subjects, repetitions, interruptions, gesticulations, long anecdotes, double entendres, indelicate expressions and affectations.

Mrs. James Parton, better known to her readers as Fanny Fern, scorned what she called "moral molasses," but she scorned it in vain. "Sweetness is to woman what sugar is to fruit," an orthodox authority affirmed. "It is her first business to be happy — a sunbeam in the house, making others happy . . . it is not every woman who remembers that her raison d'etre is to give out pleasure to all as a fire gives out heat."

The rare woman with learning was enjoined to remember that mum's the word, and to keep her learning a secret, especially from men. Even the author who, in "The American Lady's Preceptor" of 1813, prescribed study for women, advised against abstract learning and difficult research that might turn delicacy into pedantic coarseness.

"Talk to women, talk to women as much as you can," urged "The Manual of Politeness." "This is the best school. This is the way to gain fluency, because you need not care what you say . . ."

"Decorum" suggested that "When a man rises from his seat to give it to a woman, he silently says, in the spirit of true and noble manliness, 'I offer you this, madam, in memory of my mother, who suffered that I might live, and of my present future wife, who is, or is to be, the mother of my children.' "

WASHINGTON . . . paragon?

Specialists differed on the raising of skirts. For passage through muck and mire, one school allowed the use of a single hand — never two hands — to bunch and lift the skirt to the right. A stricter authority warned: "Do not try to raise your skirts. It is better to soil them . . . They are easily washed, and you cannot raise ALL."

To saunter forth with unadorned head was as unseemingly as to appear with painted face, and the rule was: "When you salute a lady . . . in the street, you should take your hat entirely off and cause it to describe a circle of at least 90 degrees from its original resting place."

"The Complete Handbook of Etiquette" warned that nothing, perhaps, more often distinguished gentlemen from plebians than the wearing of gloves: "A gentlemen . . . never suffers his hands to be bare for a moment," it declared, and noted that for young men "the ungloved hand is the cloven foot of their vulgarity."

In prescribing civility, many 19th-century authors cited the rules attributed to George Washington. Who was first in war, first in peace and the paragon of seemly behavior at odd moments:

- "... bedew no mans face with your Spittle by approaching too near him when you speak."
- "Kill no Vermin as Flea lice ticks etc. in the Sight of Others."
- "Spit not in the Fire."
- "Put not another bit into your Mouth til the former be Swallowed let not your Morsels be too big for the Gowls."

Don't Blame the Mother

LONDON — Not all murders come as the fine exciting climax to a cop chase, preferably with muscular heroes leaping over the roofs of glossy cars and plenty of satisfying gunfire. A scene played out recently in Peterborough, in the English Midlands, shows a different pattern: at first sight one drearily familiar to social workers — but this time with a twist.

The children have been playing up, it's been a bad day; the baby won't take its bottle, it turns its head away in rejection; the parent is fed up, overburdened, wretched; and in one flash of terrible temper hurls the baby to the floor. And it is dead.

What makes the case of the Byron-Evans family different, though, was simply that the person who did this was the father: a father who describes himself on forms as a "house-husband." His wife goes out to work, being not only one of the innumerable women who can't stand housework or being cooped up at home, but one of the few who has admitted it, and done a deal with her mate (in this case a musician) that he should be the one to sit on the nest.

He has now been put inside for a life sentence; she is suffering understandable agonies of self-reproach, and determined to hold the family together as best she can till he gets out again; which, life sentences being what they are in Britain, may mercifully not be all that long.

So what's so special about all this? An estimated 300 kids a year are supposed to be rubbed out by their ever-loving parents; this time it was the father, but it quite often is — or more often the step-father, which often is just a polite way of describing a deserted mother's new boyfriend, who didn't stay the night just to listen to the baby's wails.

No one who knows about it denies that violence, in a household, flows like a dark tide across all the barriers of sex and age.

But what intrigues — no, let's be honest, enrages me, is the way the comment has gone; even and especially from the lawyer for John Byron-Evans. He noted that Mrs. Byron-Evans had a domineering personality and was better educated than her husband. "She rejected traditional values and became liberated. That was the beginning of the downfall."

It's all her fault, in fact, because she ought to have been the one to suffer what she says her wretched husband was suffering — a sense that he couldn't fulfil his own career, that he was living in a sort of vacuum.

You might think, perhaps, that having a man find out what it's like to spend the whole day coping with small children, with not one single job uninterrupted for more than a few minutes, with worries about money, with nagging tiredness and a feeling of isolation, might help to highlight what it's like for the women who do it all the time.

You might think it might throw a bit of sympathy in the direction of the women who have to cope on their own in a way that no women in the world's history have had to do; without the teeming, quarrelsome, friendly, supporting world of women round them; without mothers and aunts and neighbors to share it all. You might — if you're the sort who believes the moon is made of green cheese.

In the same week a course was launched by the Open University and the Newcastle-upon-Tyne Polytechnic to help teachers and police, social workers and suchlike identify the wretched families who are likely to bash each other up. They've got out an "Unhappy Families" set that includes the Hudsons, where the father is a salesman and usually away from home and known to sleep around; and the Morgans, or rather the Morgan, since the mother's on her own, where the baby cries at night and irritates the boyfriend.

They could now add one joker to the pack: the family where a husband says he can take on all that wives take on; and can't; and their brave family attempt to break out of a stereotype ends in tragedy. I'm incredibly sorry for that man; I hope they do let him out of prison soon; for every mother in the country knows what it feels like to want to pick your screaming baby up and bang its idiot head on the floor; there but for the grace of God go the lot of us.

I just wish they wouldn't be so sure that bashing babies is women's work alone.

Social Joggers Rally in Hong Kong

By PETER DEELEY

SYDNEY — More than 1,000 spare time runners have converged on Hong Kong this weekend for one of the world's more unusual and zany gatherings — the first-ever joggers international convention. They travelled by plane — not on foot — to take part in four days of festivities, the highlight of which appropriately will be a massed run through the streets of the city on Easter Monday.

All over the world jogging has become one of the fetishes of modern-day man, and woman, as an antidote to flabbiness. From Sydney to New York, from London to Toronto, the sight of the long-distance jogger has become a familiar one wherever there is a park or a stretch of road within distance of office or home.

In Australia it has become almost a national pastime, favored by executive businessman and blue-collar worker alike as a way of warding off the dangers of diseases of the heart that may come from too little activity.

But those joggers who travelled to Hong Kong from as far apart as South Africa, America, Britain, Australia and Cyprus have rather a special claim in the fraternity of running. They are members of the Has House Harriers, an organization which this year celebrates its 40th anniversary and can claim to be the "father" of present-day joggers.

Perhaps because of their background, the "Hash" regard themselves as the elite of the part-time running world. The club was founded by two British colonial civil servants in Kuala Lumpur in 1938 who decided to run each night from their hash food restaurant to their club in order to digest their meal.

Through the intervening years, expatriate Britons have taken the name of the club with them wherever they have set up home and today the Hash claims membership in some 20 different countries. In Australia alone, there are hash groups in every major city.

But you don't just join a Hash. Membership is by introduction only and the test of acceptance is one's level of sociability. A member of the Sydney Hash, Tony Mitchell, says, "It all began as men running for an excuse to have a beer or two afterwards and we like to keep it that way."

Hash runs, usually once a week over a five-mile course in any large city, are in many ways like fox hunting.

There are human "hares", who lead the group over an unfamiliar route and who exchange cries of "on, on" with the pack of runners. Periodically, the runners stop so the slower members at the back of the rug can catch up. The finishing line is a bar, known only to the "hare". And the prize is two stainless steel buckets of beer and lemonade.

The ritual is carefully staged so that there are no winners and a minimum of rules. Anybody who recognizes the route is allowed to take a short-cut. If a probationary member shows more interest in the running than the drinking, it's unlikely that he will ever be asked back.

The club has organized a mass run along the border with Communist China as well as the Easter Monday marathon.

The Hash tend to look down on the average lunch-time jogger. As Mitchell says: "We don't approve of the image of joggers as health freaks. There's a wonderful camaradie in the Hash. Running is as much an attitude of mind as of the body."

Luck Can Help A Nature Tour

Most successful businessmen would probably admit to an element of luck in their success; I know Geore Sirk and Michael Shepard would.

These young men recently embarked on a business venture which, to say the least, will require a lot of luck for its success. George and Mike have gone into the tour business, the naturalist tour business. And, since naturalist tours, of necessity, take place outdoors, and weather being an integral part of those outdoors, it is not difficult to see where luck enters the picture.

So far in their enterprise George and Mike have had their share of luck — all good. The first two ventures of the new company — Swiftsure Tours Limited — were each a resounding success, so much so that the two young entrepreneurs might wonder if they were not already overdrawn in their luck account.

For example, with the good ship Lakewood — out of Oak Bay — as their base of operations, George and Mike took 34 enthusiastic naturalists to Race Rocks in mid-February. Nothing too unusual about that except that an Emperor Goose — the first in 13 years off Victoria — was seen on the way, as was a Short-tailed Shearwater, to say nothing of the noisy, boisterous, smelly gang of Steller's and California Sea-lions at the Rocks themselves. But it was the weather, the amazing weather, that was the highlight of the trip.

The success of the first trip promoted a second, which took place last Sunday. On this one, closer to 50 naturalists took part, with Glaucous-winged Gulls on their territories on the Chain Islands, dozens of Red-necked Grebes — a couple of them already in spring plumage — off Trial Island and murres, guillemots, auklets, brant, Black-bellied Plover and a lone Violet-green Swallow making its way north across the Strait of Juan de Fuca, among the highlights on the run to Race Rocks. But, once again, it was the weather that stole the spotlight. Simply marvellous, was the most frequently heard comment.

Now anybody the least familiar with Juan de Fuca in February and March can agree that a good day — all day — is a rarity, but two good days, scheduled weeks ahead, either have to be the epitome of good luck or evidence of influence in high places. George and Mike do not admit to the latter, so luck it must be.

Of course, like any good businessmen George and Mike will accept their share of luck, but they won't depend on it alone to keep them solvent. Between them, they kept up a running commentary on the passing parade of birds and sea life. While George was enthusiastically calling out the identities of the birds, Mike was quietly circulating among the passengers, answering questions, pointing out landmarks and discussing the future of Swiftsure Tours. Between them they made an ideal combination.

But there was another element to the success of last week's trip — and to the earlier trip as well, from what I hear — an element that cannot be ignored. This one was generated in the tiny galley of the Lakewood where, under the persistent supplications of Teresa Shepard — Mike's wife — a recalcitrant stove was made to offer up copious amounts of hot tea, hot coffee, hot chowder and — best of all — hot biscuits. The last, Teresa's specialty, were such a hit they've been christened Swiftsure Scones. They will not soon be forgotten. On the other hand, given another kind of day and another kid of weather, those scones might have been the first thing forgotten.

The two trips to Race Rocks are only the beginning. Swiftsure Tours for naturalists are planned for the coming summer to such places as eastern Washington, for Sage Grouse; the Queen Charlottes, for a visit to Naikoon Provincial Park; and the Okanagan, for some naturalizing in the Nicola Valley, Richter Pass, Mara Meadows and Anarchist Mountain; and much more.

A call to 388-4227 will put all the resources of George Sirk and Michael Shepard at your disposal — after some monetary negotiations, of course.

Coach Depot Breakin Nets Year in Prison

A 35-year-old Victoria man was sentenced Thursday to one year in prison for breaking and entering with intent to commit an indictable offence Dec. 13 at the Vancouver Island Coach Lines depot, 710 Douglas.

"One of these days you have to stop behaving in this fashion," Judge E.J.C. Stewart told Joseph Marcel Risi, convicted by a county court jury Monday night after a four-day trial.

Risi was on probation for breaking and entering with intent at another Victoria commercial premise at the time of the latest offence. He was also fined $1,200 for the earlier offence.

Judge Stewart said Risi had placed the court in the position where it had no choice between jail and a fine and the only question was how long in jail.

Risi has a criminal record going back to 1959 in Montreal, including five car thefts, three breaking and enterings with intent, two attempted car thefts, and possession of an offensive weapon, failure to remain at an accident, robbery with violence, resisting arrest, dangerous driving, driving while disqualified, assault causing bodily harm, conspiracy and possession of housebreaking instruments.

He was sentenced to two years in jail for his first offence, a car theft, and for his second breaking and entering with intent, in Montreal in 1971, he was sentenced to four years in penitentiary.

Judge Stewart said Risi was treated with "great harshness" for his early offences.

He also said Risi must have impressed a Victoria probation officer in a favorable pre-sentence report of a year ago and it seemed he had also impressed a provincial court judge who imposed a fine and probation for breaking and entering with intent despite a lengthy record.

Judge Stewart said he thought alcohol had a lot to do with the current case and it was a stupid breakin. He also said Risi was fortunate to have a good family.

BEFORE THE JUDGE

Judge Blake Allan denied bail in provincial court to a 22-year-old man charged with indecent assault following an incident early Thursday morning.

Terrance Alexander Brown, 1100 Hillside, was charged after a 19-year-old woman told police she and another 19-year-old girl had been given a ride shortly after 2 a.m.

Defence-lawyer Michael Hutchison elected trial by judge and jury and his application for a no-publication order on the bail hearing was granted.

Brown was remanded to next Wednesday to fix a preliminary hearing date.

A 17-year-old who appeared in court Tuesday and was charged with two counts of breaking and entering and six counts of attempted breaking and entering was back in court Thursday and had 10 more charges of breaking and entering and seven more of attempted breaking and entering read to him.

Gavin Wood, 134 Moss, was charged Tuesday in connection with break-in attempts and break-ins Monday in the 300- and 200-blocks Cook. The Thursday charges were in connection with last Saturday's raft of break-ins in Sidney, mostly on Beacon Avenue.

Wood, represented by lawyer Barry Mah Ming, was remanded until next Wednesday for election and bail hearing.

Gordon Richard Barry Barten, 19, of 460 Atkins, elected trial by judge without jury on a charge of trafficking in marijuana.

His preliminary hearing was set for July 6.

A man whose performance was called "brazen" by Allan was fined a total of $800.

Robert Carlow, 52, of 213 Burnside West, was found guilty of leaving the scene of an accident and refusing a breath test demand made by police.

Crown counsel Richard Law reminded the judge that Carlow hit a parked car, which then hit another parked car, and then hit a power pole before he left the scene and went home. Law said Carlow was convicted of impaired driving on March 6, 1972, and fined $350 and was also convicted of failing to remain at the scene of an accident on Oct. 20, 1964, and fined $100 at that time.

Allan levied a $500 fine for leaving the accident scene and another $300 for refusing the breath test demand.

A 19-year-old who was caught driving less than two hours after receiving a 24-hour, roadside suspension was fined $100 and ordered to perform 50 hours of community service work.

John Paul Christiansen, 350 Hector, pleaded guilty to driving while suspended March 11. Crown counsel Nicholas Lang said Christiansen was sitting in the passeger's seat when stopped by Saanich police at 1:45 a.m. but admitted switching with a passenger. Christiansen was given the roadside suspension at 12:30 a.m., Lang said, by Sidney RCMP.

Fined for drinking-driving were: Edward Thomas Johnson, 24, of 2033 Weiler, $500; Harold Ransom Sutton, 32, of 2365 Tryon, $400; Alan Ernest Gaschnitz, 21, of HMC Naden, $350; John Alfred Scragg, 41, of 9861 Third Street, $350; Jeffrey Thomas Burns, 29, of 1130 Lockley, $300; Kirk Emery Nyquist, 17, of 3963 Panther, $200; Gary Alan Youell, 17, of 6215 Welch, $150; and Penelope Marianne Morgan, 34, of 863 Fleming, $50.

In addition, Mrs. Morgan was ordered to perform 40 hours of community service work.

Log Trading Fraud Charged

VANCOUVER (CP) — Binstead, 43, of Burnaby, was charged Thursday with seven counts of fraud and 10 counts of receiving secret commissions following an RCMP investigation of MacMillan Bloedel Ltd.'s log trading division.

Binstead, the former manager of the division, was to appear in Vancouver provincial court in June. The date of his appearance was unavailable.

RCMP began their nine-month investigation of reports of secret commissions in the form of money and stock in companies at MacMillan Bloedel's request.

Bridge Tourney

The B.C. Regional Bridge Tournament will be held in Victoria at the Empress Hotel from March 28 to April 2.

The tournament will attract players from throughout Canada and the United States, including world famous player Barry Crane of Studio City, California. Crane has won more master points than any other competitor.

Also attending will be Walter K. O'Loughlin, president of the 200,000 member American Contract Bridge League.

During the six days of duplicate bridge the tournament committee expects to see a total of 2,500 tables played.

The tournament gets underway next Tuesday at 1 p.m. with an open Swiss teams championship, a knockout teams championship and welcome pairs.

business

Westcoast Trans.

Westcoast Transmission Co. Ltd. reported it had net income of $42.3 million or $3.56 a share in the year ended Dec. 31, 1977, up from $39.5 million or $3.34 in 1976.

E. C. Phillips, president and chief executive officer, said operating revenues from operations increased to $780.1 million from $579.3 million in the same period.

Phillips said the company had experienced an outstanding year in gas sales volume, net income and favorable government regulatory decisions.

He said that increasing oil and gas exploration in British Columbia had restored the increasing expansion rate the company had known before a lull in 1974 and 1975.

"Phillips said the year's activity had been highlighted by federal approval of the Alaska Highway Pipeline project.

"Much remains to be done before Alaskan natural gas flows and earnings accrue to the sponsors, but no obstacle is presently perceived that will prevent accomplishment of both," he said.

Phillips said Westcoast will spend over $230 million in 1978 to expand pipeline and related facilities.

Sherwin-Williams

Sherwin-Williams Co. of Canada Ltd., citing sharp competition and rising costs, reported a $1.8-million loss in its 1977 operations.

The deficit, compared with a $333,434-loss in 1976, also represented a net loss of $8.41 a share compared with a $1.62 loss the previous year.

R. F. Curley, chairman, and Jack Huggett, president, said in a statement mailed to shareholders that general economic conditions and political uncertainty also "thwarted our efforts to achieve satisfactory results."

However, they said a new line of products marketed by the company under the KEM label has been encouraging and "an early start has been made in our effort to accelerate our return to profitable operation in 1978."

Sales in 1977 totalled $60.4 million, up from $16.6 million the previous year.

TC Pipe

TransCanada PipeLines reported net income for 1977 of $86,183,000 or $2.01 a share compared with $79,635,000 or $1.92 for 1976.

Great Lakes Gas Transmission Co., in which TransCanada has a 50-per-cent share, also showed improved earnings.

Turbo Res.

The company said total income for the fiscal year ended Dec. 31 was $88,244,674 compared with $67,647,707 during 1976.

Net income totalled $2,628,207 or 60.5 cents a share, up from $1,603,518 or 38.3 cents a share in 1976, the company said.

During the year, Turbo acquired controlling interest in Upper Canada Resources Ltd. of Toronto, all outstanding shares of Petroleum Marketers (Red Ram) Ltd. of Edmonton, and major assets and equipment as an on-going business of Linwo (Western) Ltd. of Edmonton.

PEAK TO GET VICTIM'S NAME

MONTREAL (CP) — A 20-year-old Montreal man killed in a helicopter crash in British Columbia last August will have a mountain named after him following a special plea by his father to Prime Minister Trudeau.

Eric Cunningham, whose son Peter was killed on the last day of a summer job, said Friday he had received confirmation that a 5,200-foot peak near the crash site, a few kilometres from Upper Harbor Lake in northern B.C., would now bear the name Mount Cunningham.

Cunningham had written the prime minister "as one father to another," asking whether there was any possibility that an unnamed lake, creek or mountain could be named in memory of Peter.

Peter and two others—a fellow geology student from the University of British Columbia and the pilot—were killed in the crash. There were no survivors.

Major Quake Hits City In Soviet Asia

Times News Services

MOSCOW — A major earthquake shook areas of Soviet Central Asia early today but there were no immediate reports of casualties or damage, officials at Soviet seismic stations said.

"The whole city was woken up by the tremor, but there is no damage," said a spokesman at the seismic monitoring station in Alma Ata, a city of 870,000 that is the capital of Soviet Kazakhstan.

The strongest shocks were in the Kungei-Alatau Mountains, about 140 kilometres southeast of Alma Ata, the spokesman said.

The Soviet news agency Tass said the quake occurred at 12:06 a.m. but "there are no victims or damage."

Meanwhile, the strongest in a series of earthquakes off the Kuril Islands in the northern Pacific was reported Friday by the U.S. Geological Survey.

The latest quake registered an estimated 7.3 on the Richter scale and was the largest of at least six strong quakes near the islands in the last four days.

The Kurils are located about 480 kilometres northeast of Hokkaido, the northernmost main island of Japan.

Japanese authorities said the latest quake rattled windows in Nemuro and eastern Hokkaido. There were no reports of damage or injuries.

Five previous earthquakes ranging in magnitude from 6.2 to 7.2 on the Richter scale have been reported since Tuesday night. The strong quakes have been accompanied by smaller tremors, the survey said.

'Chopstick Diplomacy'

MOSCOW (Reuter) — The Chinese Embassy here has moved in fast with some "chopstick diplomacy" following Canada's recent expulsion of alleged Soviet spies, diplomatic sources said Friday.

In a pointed display of hospitality, the Chinese have invited the entire staff of the Canadian Embassy next month for a film showing and a taste of Chinese food, they said.

Ostensibly they were honoring the late Dr. Norman Bethune, the Canadian hero of the film, who took part in the famous "long march" alongside Chinese leader Mao Tse-tung.

But the sources said the Chinese invitation also seemed clearly intended as encouragement for the Canadians, who have been anxiously wondering how Moscow will respond to the explusions.

The Chinese embassy, whose cuisine is renowned among Moscow's foreign community, regularly entertains foreign diplomats at receptions and dinners.

But the sources said they could recall no earlier occasion when an entire embassy staff was invited at one time.

Last month Ottawa ordered out or barred 13 Soviet officials who were accused of trying to bribe a Canadian security officer to spy for Moscow.

So far, there have been no retaliatory explusions, although Moscow has complained officially to the Canadians about an alleged smear campaign against Soviet representatives.

Meanwhile, the Soviet press has responded to the Canadian allegations by accusing the Royal Canadian Mounted Police of trying to lure Soviet officials into espionage.

Cuba 'Hell' To Hijackers

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (UPI) — One of six Americans who returned to the United States from Cuba to face air piracy charges said Friday he saw a friend beaten to death in a Cuban prison and had his own eye gouged out when he protested.

"When you are an American in Cuba, it's hell, baby," Garland J. Grant, 27, of Milwaukee, told reporters at the Duval County Jail.

Grant is charged in the Jan. 22, 1971, hijacking of a Northwest Orient flight from Milwaukee to Detroit, Mich.

Grant, the only one who has agreed to meet with the press since their arrival in Jacksonville last Tuesday, described Cuba as "a nightmare, a twilight zone," where he spent five and a half years in jail.

He said he lost his left eye in a 1974 protest following the death of his friend, Alan "Lonnie" Switzer, of Chicago, by the La Cabana prison director.

"The prison director was drunk that night and he complained we were always crowding the doorways. We asked him what was happening to our letters. They weren't getting out.

"Lonnie had POW written on his shirt and the director asked him what that meant. Lonnie told him.

"Then he asked him what nationality he was. Lonnie told him he was an American. He said, 'Don't you know that you Yankees are dogs here. We, Cubans, are the guapos (handsome ones).'"

"Then he grabbed him and started banging Lonnie's head against a steel gate. All the time, he was screaming, 'Machete, machete, get me a machete.'"

Grant said the American prisoners learned the next day that Switzer, who had gone to Cuba via Jamaica a few years before and was arrested for allegedly stealing a transistor radio, had died of a brain concussion.

Eight "brothers" scaled a 20-foot-high water tower, Grant said, and refused to come down until they spoke with the Interior Minister. In the melee that followed, he was struck in the eye by a bayonet.

Grant said the eye was removed about four hours later by a Soviet doctor, who also fitted him with a glass eye.

Kickbacks Alleged

WASHINGTON (AP) — Charles C. Diggs Jr., a Democratic congressman from Michigan for 23 years, has been indicted for accepting $101,000 in kickbacks from employees of the U.S. House of Representatives.

The 35-count indictment was returned by a federal grand jury while Diggs was travelling overseas. He had been scheduled to meet President Carter in Africa next week.

The indictment said the alleged scheme to defraud the United States began around July 1, 1973 and continued until March 2, 1977.

Fourteen of the counts against the congressman were for mail fraud. One count said Diggs put Jean Stultz, an employee of the House district of Columbia committee earning $14,667 a year, on the payroll of his own office at an additional salary of $19,000 a year.

Ear Cutter Jailed

LIMA (AP) — A man who cut another man's ear in half at a 1978 New Year's party has been sentenced to a year in jail and fined the equivalent to $92.30 U.S. Daniel Esteban Riviera's lawyer said his client had been drinking.

GREAT FUN on the Great Wall of China is experienced by Christopher Duncan, 14, of Honolulu during a visit to China with his parents. Christopher later said his skateboard ride "was a bumpy experience".

Viking Losing Control

PASADENA, Calif. (UPI) — Viking Orbiter 2, now circling Mars, will be put out of commission within a few months by a gas leak, and eventually will crash into the red planet — but not until well into the next century.

Caltech's Jet Propulsion Laboratory, which operates robot space explorers for NASA, said Friday the orbiter was discovered to have a leak in its attitude control gas tank.

Occasional bursts of the gas are needed to keep the orbiter stable.

The Viking project, one of the most ambitious and successful in the U.S. space program, in 1975 launched two spacecraft that arrived at Mars the next year.

Despite its fuel leak problem, "the warranty hasn't run out" on Orbiter 2, a JPL spokesman said.

After it starts tumbling, it will continue in elliptical orbit for more than 40 years, dropping as close as 185 miles to the Martian surface and receding as far as 25,000 miles.

Radiation Levels Up

WASHINGTON (AP) — Radiation levels have increased sharply in two U.S. cities as a result of China's recent nuclear explosion, but the Environmental Protection Agency said today the levels do not pose health hazards.

The EPA's air-monitoring tests found radiation levels reaching 85 picocuries in Denver, Colo., and Cheyenne, Wyo. Normal background radiation measures from 10 to 15 picocuries and not until the level reaches 1,000 is there cause for concern.

At 50 other air-monitoring stations in the United States, the amount of radiation did not exceed normal levels, the agency said.

Low-level nuclear clouds are still crossing the U.S. while those at higher altitudes already have passed over the country.

Another Satellite Heading for Earth

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Soviet satellite that a West German space expert says will fall out of earth orbit next month is not nuclear-powered and will not present the threat that another spacecraft posed when it fell over Canada's Northwest Territories in January, the U.S. defence department said Friday.

"Cosmos 849 does not have a nuclear-power reactor and because of its small size, is likely to burn up upon re-entry," said Maj. Michael Burch, a defence department spokesman.

Burch said U.S. Air Force tracking indicates the satellite, launched Aug. 18, 1976, and weighing approximately 900 pounds, will fall to earth about May 6. It is too early to tell where it will enter the atmosphere, he added.

The defence department would not confirm the exact mission of the satellite, but many in the Cosmos series are known to be military spy spacecraft.

Heinrich Kaminsky, director of a space laboratory in Bochum, West Germany, said Friday that Cosmos 849 may fall out of orbit on about April 20. He said the spacecraft is following a path similar to that of Cosmos 954, the satellite that came down over the Northwest Territories on Jan. 24.

Cosmos 954 was nuclear-powered and showered radioactive debris in the area of its crash site.

The incident raised worldwide concerns about the advisability of placing nuclear-powered satellites into earth orbit.

Burch said there are about 4,650 objects in earth orbit, including about 900 satellites.

"Anything in earth orbit will eventually de-orbit, no matter how high it is," Burch said. "Usually everything that comes down burns up in the atmosphere before reaching the ground, but a few reach the surface."

Picked Clean By Divers Watery Grave for Queen

HONG KONG (Reuter) — The twisted remains have been hauled from the depths and now the skeleton of the once noble Queen Elizabeth — symbol of elegance in an age of ocean travel — is to be buried at sea.

A 20-man team of South Korean divers, groping through a maze of pipes in the giant liner's muddy carcass, have dragged out 45,000 tons of scrap. The old pride of the transatlantic is ready for her funeral.

The Queen Elizabeth was undergoing conversion into a floating university when a fire broke out and the ship sank to the bottom of Hong Kong harbor in January, 1972.

Divers faced great hazards below but project officials say no one was hurt.

Maximum visibility was seven feet, but even that visibility vanished when divers stirred up the mud in their demolition moves.

It was painstakingly slow work. They had to dig through huge piles of mud using water jets to clear the quagmire and giant underwater vacuum cleaners to remove it.

Then with hammers, cutting torches and explosives, they chipped away at the huge hulk, removing it bit by bit.

Scrap was used for building materials. Captain Jock Anderson, a salvage consultant, explained, "They cut the stuff up and make reinforcing rods for new buildings here."

Some of the ship's remains were put to more glamorous use. Five thousand commemorative pens were made out of 700 pounds of salvaged brass from the sunken hulk.

However, it all seemed a desperately sad end for the queen of the seas which once plied the Atlantic between Southampton, Cherbourg and New York with a passenger list stocked with aristocrats and millionaires.

The luxury liner was also a war hero. Adolf Hitler offered U-boat captains a $152,000 reward for sinking her but the Scottish-build giant managed to transport 800,000 troops in journeys totalling a half-million miles of sea.

The Cunard Line finally sold her to an American businessman who planned in vain to turn her into a Florida tourist attraction.

The plans collapsed and Hong Kong businessman C. Y. Tung bought the liner at auction for about $2.3 million. He renamed her Seawise University and had hoped for United Nations backing for his ambitious academic project.

But his dreams went up in flames on Jan. 9, 1972, when fire engulfed the liner as it was being refitted in Hong Kong's imposing harbor.

A court of inquiry found that while it had no direct or conclusive evidence, "It was satisfied that by far the most likely cause of the fires was a series of deliberate acts by a person or persons unknown." No one was ever arrested and the great sea mystery was never solved.

TWO NAILED TO CROSS

MANILA (AP) — Two Filipinos had themselves nailed to wooden crosses one after another on Good Friday in a re-enactment of Jesus' crucifixion almost 2,000 years ago.

A crowd of 40,000 shrieked and jostled for a better view, first of Juanito Piring, 35, then Mariano Bagtas, 28, who were nailed through the palms and stayed on the crosses for three minutes.

Their crucifixion took place on a stage in the village of San Fernando, 50 kilometres north of Manila.

Piring, who has been crucified on Good Friday for several years running, called the ritual an "atonement for my sins and those of others."

Moon Church Official Lays Racket Charges

SEOUL (AP) — A former confidant of Rev. Sun Myung Moon filed a civil suit today claiming the Unification Church is a "pseudo-religious, racketeering" group which should be disbanded.

Calling the church "anti-human, anti-social, anti-moral, and anti-family," Kim Myung-see also said Moon has had intimate relations with more than 100 females and that his church favors promiscuity.

Kim is seeking $2 million in personal damages and a court ruling that the Unification Church is not a Christian group as it claims to be.

It was the first time since Moon's church was legally registered as a religious foundation on May 1, 1954, that a Korean court was asked to determine the legitimacy of the church as a Christian organization.

Kim, who recently resigned as a high-ranking church official in charge of confidential matters, filed the complaint in Seoul district court naming Moon and the church as co-defendants. He claimed that during his 15-year membership with the church, he was forced to give up about 840 acres of land, now worth an estimate $1.4 million.

Church headquarters here had no comment on the complaint.

The Unification Church claims to have a membership of four million persons.

A Major Facelift For Death Hotel

PHILADELPHIA (UPI) — The elegant Bellevue Stratford Hotel, shut down 16 months ago by the spectre of Legionnaires' Disease, will soon be reopened under new management.

A $32 million restoration project for the Bellevue will be announced next Tuesday during ceremonies at the hotel.

The hotel, which will be renamed the Fairmont Hotel in Philadelphia, was once one of the city's most popular tourist hotels.

In late summer of 1976, a mysterious disease claimed the lives of 29 persons, most of whom had attended a Pennsylvania American Legion convention headquartered at the Bellevue.

The disease baffled medical doctors for several months thereafter and has subsequently struck in other states.

The publicity generated by the outbreak caused the hotel to suffer a dramatic drop in business and it was forced to close in November 1976.

PWA Strike 'Needless'

The president of Pacific Western Airlines (PWA) said Friday in Calgary the airline is maintaining adequate service despite rotating strike action by members of the Canadian Air Line Employees Association (CALEA).

In a letter to CALEA members, PWA president Rhys Eyton called the walkouts unnecessary and counter-productive. He said two of the three issues involved in contract negotiations were settled in principle before the union left the bargaining table and instituted the work stoppages.

Eyton said it is difficult to understand why the association sanctioned the strike action when the parties were so close to resolving the over-all dispute.

However, Al Wouters, CALEA regional director, denied that agreement was reached in principle on three issues before the union left the bargaining table.

Wouters said the union wants the bulk of any pay increase spread over the top categories, which the union represents, while PWA wants the increase spread equally among all nine classes of workers.

PWA officials said management and supervisory personnel are maintaining service to the travelling public despite the rotating strikes and other work disturbances by CALEA members. About one-fifth of association members crossed picket lines.

The members set up picket lines Friday at six airports in B.C.— Vancouver International, Kelowna, Castlegar, Smithers, Comox and Port Hardy.

Pickets were still in place at Vancouver International Airport and PWA bases in the Northwest Territories early Saturday after being set up at several B.C. points Friday.

Eyton said the company and the association had agreed in principle on the length of the contract and a pay raise. It was the method of distributing the increase that was in dispute, he said.

The union has asked for different percentage increases to the varying pay scales, but the company has said that that would be inequitable.

Eyton said a third issue mentioned by assocation officials, but not discussed, is that of job security. The union maintains that the company is seeking authority to contract out functions now performed by union members.

In his letter to the association, Eyton said the company has no intention of eroding jobs presently held by assocation members.

Civil War Near In Rhodesia?

Shona peoples, who make up more than 80 per cent of Rhodesia's 6.7 million blacks, Muzorewa, 52, is the only one of the three black signers of the agreement here with a proven national following of major scope. He has repeatedly brought out crowds of 100,000 or more at his homecoming rallies.

Whether the soft-spoken prelate can rise to the challenge of leadership at this time of national crisis is a question many Rhodesians are pondering. In his favor, observers note a new self-confidence, determination and ability to articulate his views since his commitment to internal settlement. White Rhodesian officials were greatly encouraged by the way he stood up to British and American pressures during his recent trip to London and Washington.

Like the bishop's uncertain leadership abilities, the about-to-be-launched "hearts and minds" campaign aimed at the guerrillas is a subject of constant debate in Salisbury. Both the bishop and the Rev. Ndabaningi Sithole, another signer of the March 3 Salisbury agreement, talk with great confidence in public of their ability to command the guerrillas to lay down their arms and come home.

But a steadily increasing proportion of the country, a third or more of which is already under strong Patriotic Front influence, is coming within the sphere of guerrilla activities. It is now widely believed that even the black townships around Salisbury are heavily infiltrated with guerrillas bold enough to take time out there from the rigors of the bush.

In addition, there are thousands of freshly trained guerrillas, belonging to Joshua Nkomo's Ndebele-based Zimbabwe African Peoples Union (ZAPU), now joining the battle. Observers here see little reason for the Ndebele, traditional warriors, to lay down their arms when the transitional government is dominated by Shona leaders.

Nkomo, aside from receiving Soviet weapons and Cuban instructors, also has the political backing of the Soviet Union, which has denounced the Salisbury settlement. Nkomo's faction has trained in Angola and Zambia.

A Grand Holiday — For a Grand Less

(Second of Two Parts)

max low

Feelings of guilt have been creeping over me and no doubt I will receive 55 letters from my patriotic friend M.P.B. (Maurice) Wrixon — but I have just returned from a one-week skiing vacation in the U.S.

I wanted to holiday in Canada, honest I did. Moved by the pleas of Finance Minister Jean Chretien for Canadians to ski at home during the winter instead of sitting in bars in Miami, I looked at several possibilities.

Not wishing to add to the huge domestic travel deficit (Canadians spent $2 billion more last year travelling in foreign countries than the amount tourists spent in this country and experts predict that unless the trend is reversed the annual deficit will be more like $10 billion by 1985) I actually made a tentative booking for a ski trip to Alberta.

We thought it would be great for the children to see the Rockies by train and to ski on Canadian soil in the mountains around Banff. Maybe some day they will but on this occasion we were confronted with such costs and hassles that we instead ended up, like a great many other Canadians, at the very pleasant Crystal Mountain ski resort in Washington.

Now there are those who say cost isn't everything but when you're trying to raise a family in these days of soaring inflation and you feel you're simply not being offered a fair deal, it can be very important.

We had considered what was widely advertised as a great family package — six nights' accommodation at the Banff Springs Hotel, five days' skiing and a night each way spent on a CP Rail train — until we discovered they didn't really want children after all.

Take a look at the costs and you'll see what I mean.

For adults sharing accommodation the package worked out at $245 each and for what the brochure described as a child under 12 sharing with two adults it was $114. That was a bit high we felt but at least it sounded fair so we put our names down. We were going to Banff.

But no, the travel agent told us later when we went in to confirm the booking. It wasn't quite as simple as that. The $114 was okay for each of two children (that's one per adult) but for the extra child (and ours are all under 12) we'd have to pay the same as for a single adult and more, in fact, than any of us were paying: $315! Sorry, they said, that was the rule. There were no exceptions.

On top of that, we soon discovered the 'package' included only a ticket to get aboard the train. If you wanted to sleep at all you had to pay an extra $30 for each upper berth, $50 for a lower berth or $76 per person to share a bedroom.

In all, five days of skiing were going to cost the family around $1,500 and that didn't include any food. Nor did the accommodation have any facilities to prepare food yourself.

At Crystal Mountain, a truly delightful family-type place, we enjoyed five full days skiing with an abundance of slopes and no lineups, stayed in a clean modern apartment and swam in a heated open-air pool each night.

Granted we were frugal, cooked our own meals and only dined out regally one night but the whole thing — accommodation, ferry fares, gas, food and lift tickets — cost us $500 American ($565 Canadian).

And included in that amount were lessons every day for our three kids from Bob Link, a weather-beaten old ski instructor who said he goofed off to Crystal Mountain six years ago and has been goofing off ever since.

"Sure we get thousands of Canadians up here," Bob told me. "They love it here.

"But, of course, I'm a Canadian," he added and then grinned. "Well, I'm sort of as my father was born in Winnipeg."

A warm and dedicated man with eight grandchildren of his own, Bob is great with the kids. They learn a lot and love every minute with him on the slopes.

But Bob Link is only a small part of what makes Crystal Mountain a smooth operation. In fact, when you chat with Canadians out on the snow or in the pool you find it's this lack of problems they enjoy. They can relax.

A man from North Vancouver told me he'd skied many places but has been taking his family each spring to Crystal Mountain now for 11 years.

"You don't get the frustrations here that you find in many Canadian resorts which often tend to be a little Mickey Mouse in their operations," he explained.

"Even when you go to a place like Whistler you find that maybe this chair lift is not working or something else should be running by tomorrow."

Hopefully, we'll get it all together one day in Canada but until we do I don't think Chretien and his cronies can blame those of us who head south for a ski holiday that goes more smoothly . . . and costs a whole lot less.

Insulation Aid Demand is Brisk

More than 15 elderly and handicapped persons have applied so far for special aid from the newly-launched federal Victoria Home Re-insulation Service, says project co-ordinator Paul Phillips.

Under the program, service workers will install insulation in the homes of people who cannot afford to hire a contractor or are unable to work themselves.

"Applicants are screened by neighborhood advisory committees," Phillips said.

"The service is only for senior citizens, the handicapped and people on social assistance."

The federal government pays two-thirds of the cost and the remaining one-third is paid by the human resources ministry out of its special needs fund.

The service has a crew composed of seven women and three men to install the insulation.

Both materials and workers are transported in a bus once used by a volunteer food delivery service for the handicapped and the elderly.

The service was discontinued in July 1977 when Human Resource Minister Bill Vander Zalm withdrew the monthly grant necessary to keep the food service in operation.

The bus was acquired by the federal department of energy, mines and resources which sponsors the insulation program.

Phillips said the service also offers the general public to test household furnaces to see that they are working properly and not wasting money on high fuel bills.

The test does not include furnace maintenance or servicing.

"We also provide people with information on various forms of financing for re-insulating homes," Phillips said.

"Special financing is only available for homes built prior to 1946."

The re-insulation service is located at 1230 Government Street, next door to the post office. The telephone number is 388-9276. For people living in the Esquimalt-Saanich area, the office is located at 3460 Tillicum Road and the phone number is 385-1625.

Ratepayers Press Housing Scheme

The Royal Oak Ratepayers Association will push for quick residential development now that the proposed Royal Oak industrial park has been defeated, president Ben Pires said today.

"We want to see the land used for residential purposes as soon as possible," he said.

Pires said the association will not object to a mixture of quality townhouses along with single family homes in the 150 acres which had been earmarked for the industrial park.

Pires said the association has only two concerns: to see quick approval for residential development on the land and to obtain some recreation facilities as part of the development.

"With 500 new families in the area we will need a good park and other facilities like tennis courts. We will do a canvass of our members to obtain ideas on what might be included."

He said there are virtually no municipal recreational facilities in the Royal Oak area despite the rapidly-growing population.

He said he would be pleased to discuss recreation proposals with Saanich officials and would like to meet with Art Kool, spokesman for the property owners, on the question of speedy development for residential use.

Meanwhile, Saanich Mayor Mel Couvelier said he will announce the new proposed site for an industrial park as soon as possible, within weeks.

He said he realizes the defeat of the Royal Oak proposal means Saanich has to find an alternative site quickly and council is at work on this problem now.

Greater Victoria Economic Development Commission chairman Larry Ryan expressed disappointment at the defeat of the Royal Oak proposal, saying new industries must be started to help reduce unemployment, which is running about 10 per cent in Victoria and is as high as 30 per cent for young people.

Victoria Chamber of Commerce president John Ansell also expressed disappointment, adding that Couvelier has an obligation to name an alternative site as soon as possible because of the urgent need for industrial land.

Probe Clears Staff

Saanich police did not dig up any dirt in their topsoil investigation and no charges will be laid, Mayor Mel Couvelier has announced.

The probe was ordered when civic officials noticed there was less topsoil than indicated by an inventory.

Couvelier said he is pleased the investigation has ended rumors of misconduct by municipal employees.

"It is not only unfair to our civil servants it is apparently unfounded," he said.

"I appreciate the frustration our employees must feel in the face of unsupported allegations."

While there is no indication of wrongdoing, the mayor has asked administrator William Tremayne to recommend changes in accounting procedures involving stock control.

Program Cuts Feared

The family counselling and social work program at the Victoria Law Centre faces drastic cutbacks unless community or government funding is found.

Jocelyn Gifford, sessional lecturer at the University of Victoria School of Social Work and social worker at the centre, says about $22,000 is needed to ensure the program's continuance.

The money would permit the centre to hire a full time social worker.

Up to now, the services have been provided through the university by Gifford and two social work students on a part-time basis. The university allows Gifford to spend half her time on the project.

However, the students are leaving April 6 and Gifford says she can't do the job on her own as the university has indicated it will only continue supporting the program provided she devotes less time to clients and more to students and public education.

She says since the service started in January, 1977, the program has helped more than 200 persons.

The majority were involved in marriage breakdowns, child protection and maintenance matters before the Family Court.

Gifford says the service is a vital part of the centre, helping people deal with emotional crises stemming from legal problems.

She says the Law Foundation won't provide funds because the program technically isn't a legal service and both the human resources ministry and corrections branch, while keen to see it continued, plead they can't help because of a lack of funds in their budgets.

Extra Sailings Eyed Monday

The Queen of Alberni will be standing by for extra duty Monday, a B.C. Ferries spokesman said today.

"We expect Sunday traffic to be normal but Monday should be busy," Swartz Bay terminal manager R.E. Williams said.

There will be extra sailings of the Alberni at 4.30 p.m. from Tsawwassen and at about 6 p.m. from Swartz Bay, if needed, he said.

"The decision will be made at the last minute, depending on the volume of traffic. We expect it will be busy."

Things hopefully won't be as hectic as Thursday when even extra sailings couldn't bring all the traffic over from Tsawwassen. About 150 vehicles were left on the dock.

On the Swartz Bay side, all cars that waited caught the last ferry. The day before Good Friday is traditionally the busiest day of the year and the problem was aggravated this time by the Pacific Western Airlines slowdown which created an even higher volume of traffic than expected.

Homeward bound traffic should be lighter because not everyone gets the Monday holiday and traffic will be spread over two days.

"Anyone who is worried about heavy traffic should plan on the 8 a.m. sailing in either direction," Williams said.

"There are lineups for the first sailing, the eager beavers, at 6.30 a.m. at Tsawwassen and 7 a.m. at Swartz Bay but it is quiet on the 8 a.m. sailings. From then on it builds up during the day."

Traffic was moderate on all routes on Good Friday.

CELEBRATION'S RIGHT ON TRACK

It might have been one of the world's shortest railways but it fulfilled a promise to bring Victoria into Confederation.

On Wednesday, provincial and civic dignitaries will celebrate the 90th anniversary of the construction of the Esquimalt-Victoria railway, which brought the trans-Canada train into the city.

A 90-pound cake, bands, harbor whistles and other festivities will greet the arrival of decorated coaches of the E & N across the Johnson Street bridge into the city at 5.30 p.m.

At that time 90 years ago, 5,000 people were on hand for what was called the noisiest celebration in the city's young history.

Victoria Ald. Murray Glazier, organizer of the celebration, said after the party is over, local officials should work with even greater energy to save the E & N pasenger service, which is scheduled to end in June.

Glazier said it could develop into a fast commuter link between Langford and the city.

The saga began in 1871 when B.C. entered Confederation on the promise the rail line would be built from eastern Canada to Vancouver and Victoria.

In 1873 sod was turned in Esquimalt in preparation for the terminal but in 1879, Ottawa announced the train would only go as far as Burrard Inlet and track would not be laid on Vancouver Island.

The uproar was so intense Ottawa agreed to construct an Island line from Nanaimo to Victoria.

Work was completed from Nanaimo to Esquimalt in 1886 and Prime Minister John A. Macdonald drove the last spike. But there remained the commitment to bring the train into Victoria.

A bridge was built at Johnson and on March 29, 1988, 90 years ago, the transcontinental railway at last arrived in Victoria.

Newspaper accounts of the day said:

"An excited crowd of 5,000 broke into cheering as the train crossed into Victoria."

The builder, Robert Dunsmuir, who got two million acres of land and $750,000 for the E & N line, was greeted at the Pandora station by Premier Robson and Mayor Grant.

The ceremony will be recreated Wednesday.

When the dayliner arrives at Esquimalt after its regular run from Comox, it will carry up-Island and local dignitaries, some in 1880s costume.

The 90-pound birthday cake will be cut by Premier Bill Bennett, Mayor Mike Young and A. Leeming, a 98-year-old retired E & N conductor.

Cougars Win Big One — With One Still Left

STEVE AMISS
. . .starry effort

Victoria Cougars met the challenge.

Responding magnificently to the pressure and pesky opposition from Seattle, the Cougars won "the big game" and, quite suddenly, are looking towards participation in the Western Canada Hockey league playoffs.

Except. . .

There is one "if" and a team from Medicine Hat standing in the way.

The Cougars, churning out a complete team effort, defeated the Breakers 6-2 in Seattle Friday. The players and a few hundred supporters who visited Civic Centre for the game acted, at game's end, as if the Cougars had wrapped up a playoff berth and need only to put in a token appearance tonight at Memorial Arena.

Obviously delighted with his team's performance in Seattle, one of Shupe's first tasks was to fire out a warning note to a happy dressing room. The Cougars can't, he said, take tonight's game lightly.

He'll remind the Cougars again today that they still must win one more game in order to qualify for the Western Division playoffs, which may be anticlimatic to one of the most exciting races in league history.

Despite Friday's loss, Seattle, its regular campaign over, still has an edge. One point. . .over the Cougars and New Westminster Bruins. The Cougars, as mentioned, finish up tonight against the Tigers while the Bruins have a home-and-home series (Sunday and Monday) remaining with division-winning Portland Winter Hawks.

A win tonight would clinch a playoff berth for the Cougars, leaving the destinies of Seattle and New Westminster at the hands of Portland. The Winter Hawks also would spell out Victoria's fate if the Cougars lose tonight. With only one point separating the three teams, ties can not be discounted.

Little wonder, then, that Shupe quickly reminded his players after Friday's victory that they still have a job to do.

They handled Friday's task magnificently. From goaltender Steve Amiss out, all the Cougars responded despite the psychological pressure of playing on the road. When there were faltering moments, there always was another Cougar to cover up.

Victoria's three centres sparked the forwards' two-way efforts. Geordie Robertson, scoring his 60th and 61st goals of the season, got Victoria going with a pair of first-period power-play goals. Gary Lupul picked up a pair of well-deserved assists and the third centre, Dennis Fenske, provided a late, third-period goal that made it 5-2 and ultimately sealed the victory.

The defence was solid but it all was anchored by Amiss. The redhead may have set the tone in the opening seconds. He made a remarkable toe save on a shot by Seattle's Ron Kolman at the 30-second mark. That kept Cougars from starting in a hole, and, as it turned out, the Victoria team never looked back.

Amiss kept Cougars on top with a 34-stop display. Over the route, he frustrated Ryan Walter and Errol Rausse, Seattle's top gunners, with some outstanding stops at crucial moments.

Struck on the face mask by a hard shot in the second period, Amiss shook it off quickly and promptly made more good saves when the Breakers were given opportunity, a few minutes later, to enjoy a two-man attacking advantage for 43 seconds.

In addition to Robertson's pair and the one by Fenske, Cougars also got goals from rookie Mike Shields, defenceman Leroy Heck and Bill Jobson. Walter, who played 42 of the 60 minutes, and defenceman Dwayne Lowdermilk scored for the Breakers.

Victoria's penalty-killing also figured strongly. Lowdermilk scored his goal on a power play but the Cougars killed off five other shorthanded situations with comparative ease.

The Cougar victory overshadowed all else. For the record, however, Bill Derlago boosted his league-leading goals total to 89 with four in Brandon's 9-6 victory over Flin Flon Bombers; Saskatoon Blades outgunnged Regina Pats 9-7, and Lethbridge Broncos and Billings Bighorns fought to a 7-7 draw in a game marred by 72 penalties, including a match penalty to Bighorns' Mike Kouwenhoven for deliberate attempt to injure.

AMONG KAREN'S 'FRIENDS'

One of Canada's most exciting young skaters, Toronto's Vern Taylor (above) will be one of the "friends" Karen Magnussen will introduce next Saturday at Memorial Arena. The "Karen and Friends" figure skating show is being staged in Victoria for the first time. The show, sponsored by the Karen Magnussen Foundation, enables former world champion to contribute bursaries to deserving British Columbia and Canadian amateurs. Foundation has contributed $30,000 so far. Taylor, who became the first skater in history to land a triple axel in the world championships at Ottawa recently, finished second in the Canadian finals at Victoria last month. Also scheduled to participate in next Saturday's program is Canadian women's champion Heather Kemkaran.

Esposito Passes Hull; 29th Three-Goal Game

By The Canadian Press

Phil Esposito and Ron Duguay scored three goals apiece, but Nick Fotiu may have been just as valuable to New York Rangers in their 11-4 romp over Washington Capitals with the three-man knockout he recorded.

"Nick did the job," New York coach Jean-Guy Talbot said of the left winger who has scored only one goal in 53 National Hockey League games this season. "He got three guys out and that turned the game around."

Talbot referred to a fight Fotiu was involved in midway through the first period, with the Rangers leading 2-1.

When it was over, Fotiu had been penalized two minutes for elbowing, five minutes for fighting, and also was assessed a 10-minute misconduct penalty. But, as they say, you should have seen what happened to the other guys.

The Capitals, who drew a club record 64 penalty minutes in the first period, lost defencemen Bryan Watson and Gord Lane, and left winger Mike Marson with game misconduct penalties.

"Nicky did a lot for our team," said an admiring Esposito. "Bryan was looking for trouble from the start, and it worked out well."

When Esposito scored his second power-play goal for the Rangers at 7:39 of the second period, it marked the 29th time he had scored three or more goals in a game. That enabled him to snap the mark he shared with former team-mate Bobby Hull, who now is with Winnipeg Jets of the World Hockey Association.

"That put me ahead of a pretty good guy in the NHL," the 36-year-old Esposito said. "But in professional hockey, Bobby's got to be way ahead."

Elsewhere, Los Angeles Kings edged Cleveland Barons 4-3, while Buffalo Sabres and Vancouver Canucks played to a 2-2 tie. (Summaries are on page 21.)

In Vancouver, third-period goals by Jere Gillis and Hilliard Graves pulled the Canucks into the tie with the Sabres. Gillis scored his 22nd of the season early in the final period and Graves got his 16th with less than four minutes to play.

Buffalo had taken a 2-0 lead in the second period on a shorthanded goal by Craig Ramsay and a power-play effort by Jim Lorentz.

The single point allowed the Canucks to increase their lead over third-place Colorado Rockies to two points in the fight for the last playoff spot in the Smythe Division, while Buffalo moved to within six points of first-place Boston Bruins in the Adams Division.

At Richfield, Ohio, the Kings spotted the Barons a 2-0 first-period lead before storming back with four consecutive goals, two by centre Marcel Dionne. The win allowed Los Angeles to open up a four-point bulge on the idle Detroit Red Wings in the battle for second place in the Norris Division.

CAUTHEN TO RIDE AT EX-PARK OPENER

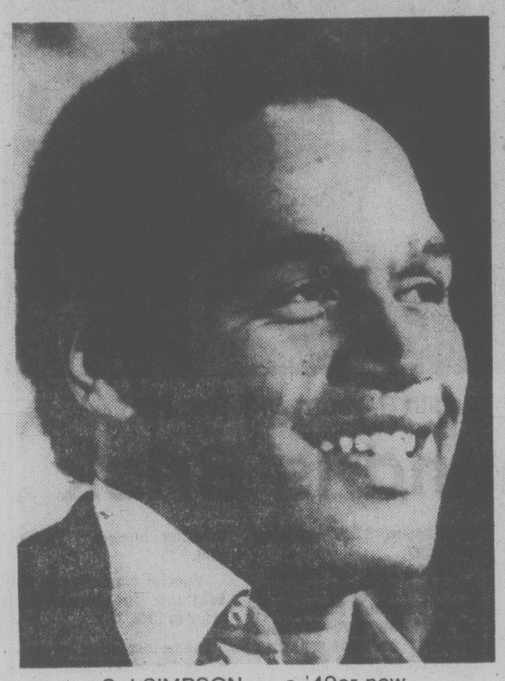
Jockey Steve Cauthen, man-of-the-year in sports in the United States in 1977 and the sensation of the horse racing season, will appear at Exhibition Park in Vancouver on opening day of the thoroughbred season, April 10.

Cauthen, 17, won over $5 million in purses last year. Three times he had six winners on a card, a horse racing first. He already has over 500 winners to his credit and just last week scored a big double at Santa Anita, winning the San Felipe Stakes and the San Luis Stakes on successive days.

Cauthen was named athlete of the year by the Associated Press and Sports Illustrated Magazine in 1977.

All net proceeds from the opening-day card go to the United Way.

Bills Sad: Go-Juice-Go is Gone



O.J.SIMPSON . . a '49er now

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — The departure of O. J. Simpson created both sadness and optimism Friday.

Few like to see a genuine star go, but in the last two seasons Buffalo Bills had posted a miserable 5-23 record and watched attendance plummet with one of the National Football League's premier running backs on the roster.

"We have surrendered the services of a superb athlete," said Bills coach Chuck Knox of the trade which sent Simpson, nicknamed The Juice, to San Francisco '49ers for five draft choices over the next three years.

"But we have put ourselves in the position in this and future drafts to obtain the kind of quality players who can make Buffalo a strong franchise for years to come."

Several key players agreed. In a telephone interview from Shreveport, La., quarterback Joe Ferguson said:

"If we've gotta start a rebuilding program in Buffalo, it's gotta start there. I'm not overjoyed to see O. J. go, but if it'll help the team . . ."

Joe DeLamielleure, an all-pro guard for three consecutive years and one who was credited with opening many of the holes for Simpson, was optimistic.

"I think it was a good deal for the Bills," he said. "It depends how they (draft picks) are used."

Simpson, who will be 31 on July 9, suffered a knee injury and missed the second half of the 1977 season. He underwent cartilage surgery last November and was not seen in Buffalo or at any Bills game the rest of the season. This, and perhaps his $733,000 annual salary, caused some resentment among team members.

Bills owner Ralph Wilson overflowed with tears and praise at Simpson's departure.

"Most of all, O. J. Simpson is a friend. We have laughed together in moments of triumph and cried together in moments of pain. He made a contribution to professional football and to Buffalo that may never be matched.

"He wanted to play on the West Coast, where he has many personal ties, and at this stage in his career, he deserves that opportunity. He leaves Buffalo with tears in my eyes."

Safari Rally Has Problems

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — The 26th Safari auto rally was taking a heavy toll of men and machines as it headed into its second day Friday.

A driving rain and floods forced rally organizers to reroute whole sections of the 1,123-mile first leg. The 3,000-mile rally, being run in three legs over five days, began Thursday with 68 starters. Officials said Friday that 44 cars were still in the race.

Torrential rainfall and flashfloods turned much of the first leg, through the great Fift Valley and the former White highlands, into a mudbath.

Finley Out Of Denver Deal

DENVER (AP) — Charles Finley has withdrawn his offer to sell the Oakland A's major league baseball team to Denver oilman Marvin Davis, Davis's lawyer announced Friday.

Lawyer Ben Stapleton handed out a terse statement from Davis, who is vacationing in California, which indicated the negotiations to move the A's from Oakland to Denver are dead.

The statement said:

"Charles Finley has withdrawn his offer to sell his Oakland franchise to Denver.

"It is a sad day for baseball, a sad day for Denver, and a sad day for me. I was determined to bring major league baseball to Denver this year. If Mr. Finley would reconsider his decision, even at this extremely late date, we still have the capabilities to complete the transfer."

Finley wasn't immediately available for comment.

But the deal apparently broke down Thursday over Finley's reluctance to pay more than $1 million to break the A's lease with the Oakland Coliseum directors.

The coliseum management had asked for $3.25 million to release the team from the lease which had 10 years left on it. The other major league owners had agreed to pay $1 million if Finley would pay $2 million.

Finley, however, had argued that the co-owners of the San Francisco Giants should pay $1 million, because their team would benefit from the move, or that the other major league owners should come up with more than $1 million.

The lease debate came to a crisis at noon Thursday, the deadline American League president Lee MacPhail had given Finley to pay $2 million of the $3.25 demanded by the coliseum.

In Chicago on Thursday night, Finley said he wasn't going to pay that disputed $1 million and since he hadn't heard from MacPhail he faced the possibility of playing ball in Oakland.

Ten Islanders Invited

Ten Vancouver Islanders have been named to the 21-man squad from which the Canadian national rugby team will be chosen to play the United States in the second annual Test match in Baltimore May 28.

Victoria's Alan Rees, one of five selectors spread across the country, told the Times Friday that wing forward Ken Wilke of James Bay Athletic Association will captain Canada in the big game.

Wilke's clubmates included in the squad are Darryl Noulette, K.C.Walt, Mick Eckardt, Hans de Goede and Ray Rogers and the other Islanders are Dwayne van Eeuwen and Pat Simmons of Cowichan, Gary Grant of UVic Vikings and Jim Wenman of Oak Bay Wanderers.

There are also five other B.C. players from the Vancouver area named to the squad — Preston Wiley, Robbie Greig, Spence McTavish, Gary Hariyama and Ro Hindson.

The six players included from the rest of Canada are Greg Gonis and Tony Bauer of Alberta, Gord Fownes and Keith Wilkinson of Quebec, Mike Williams of Ontario and Mike Luke of Newfoundland.

Canada will play a warmup game in Ottawa on May 24 and should start as favorites to beat the U.S. in the Test match for the second year in a row.

Rees, however, is expecting the Americans to come up with a better performance this time around and make a closer go of it.

"We won easily last time," Rees explained, "but since then the American team has been on a major international tour to Britain and will be all out for revenge at Baltimore."

Prince Rupert Clips Athletics

KELOWNA — Victoria Athletics will have to do it the hard way if they hope to capture the British Columbia senior "B" men's basketball championship.

Sparked by Jim Siccone's 23-point performance, Prince Rupert Crest defeated the Victoria district champs 72-65 Friday in the opening round of the provincial showdown.

Tom Holmes, with 22, and Duff McCaghey, with 16, topped Athletics, who now are forced to come up through the consolation bracket if they hope to win the eight-team, double-knockout tournament.

In other first-round games Friday, Penticton edged North Surrey Webbs 69-68 and Prince George trounced Terrace 101-83.

The tournament resumes today, winds up Sunday.

Wadkins Quits Reminiscing

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. (AP) — Lanny Wadkins, who said he has decided to "quit reminiscing and start playing," fired a four-under-par 67 and moved into a five-way tie for the second-round lead Friday in the $225,000 Heritage golf tournament.

At 137, five shots under par on the 6,655-yard Harbour Town Golf Links, Wadkins shares the 36-hole lead with veteran Miller Barber, George Burns, Larry Nelson and Hale Irwin.

Burns closed with a 65, the best round of the warm day. "Probably the best round I've played this year," Burns said. Barber had a 67 despite some erratic work with the driver that sent him scurrying to the practice tee, and Nelson and Irwin had 68s.

Former U.S. Open champion Lou Graham, one of three who shared the first-round lead, had to struggle back from a double bogey and said: "I was probably lucky to get in at par" 71. He was one stroke off the lead at 138.

U.S. Open champion Hubert Green had a second consecutive 70 and was in position to challenge for another Heritage title at 140. Also at that figure was Tom Weiskopf, who matched par 71.

Wadkins broke a lengthy slump last fall when he won the PGA national title, the World Series of Golf and some $150,000 in a one-month period. He has missed the cut in half the tournaments he has played this season.

"I think the reason I've got off to such a slow start this year is that I've spent too much time reminiscing about that month last year," he said. "Now it's time to get down to playing again."

He missed only three greens, once chipping in for birdie, and had one bogey, a three-putt from 30 feet on the 13th.

Coi Gives Canada Second Gold Medal

MEGEVE, France (CP) — Dennis Coi of North Vancouver skated a conservative long program Friday to win the men's title at the world junior figure skating championships.

Coi's gold medal was Canada's second of the meet. On Thursday, Barbara Underhill of Oshawa, Ont., and Paul Martini of Toronto took the pairs title.

Canada could pick up a third gold medal before the championships end. Kelly Johnson of Toronto and Kris Barber of Glen Williams, Ont., are in second place overall after the fourth round of the dance competition.

The Canadian couple is favored to move past the first-place Russian pair of Tatiana Durasova and Sergei Panomarenko after today's final dance. The Canadians trail the Russian couple by just 2.92 points.

The 16-year-old Coi led the competition after the short program Thursday. Vladimir Kotin of the Soviet Union, who led after the compulsory figures, finished second overall and Brian Boitano of the United States was third. Brian Orser of Penetang, Kira Ivanova of the Soviet Union leads the women's singles competition after Friday's short program. Petra Ernest of West Germany is in second place and Corinna Tanski, also of West Germany, is third.

Ten-year-old Tracy Wainman of Mississauga, Ont., the youngest competitor here, is in ninth place overall and Lorri Baier of Mitchell, Ont., is 12th.

Martini and Underhill, the Canadian junior champions, were fourth going into the long program, which counts for 70 per cent of the total score. All nine judges gave the Canadians first place by a wide margin in Thursday's final.

"It was very close to the way we skated at the Canadian championships (at Victoria)," Martini said. "We skated well there and we skated well here. I don't think I even broke out into a sweat tonight."

BOWLERS OF THE WEEK

Claiming tenpin laurels during 22nd week of 15th annual Times Bowler-of-the-Week contest are Jessie Loo and Darrel Aune, who both rolled division-topping series in Friday Niters League at Mayfair Lanes. Jessie took women's honors with 180-233-189 — 602 series and Darrel collected men's award with 192-233-224 — 649 series.

Drysdale Surprises In Las Vegas Tourney

Times News Services

Bjorn Borg of Sweden, Harold Solomon, Vitas Gerulaitis and Cliff Drysdale all won their quarter-final matches Friday in the $200,000 tennis tournament of champions at Las Vegas.

To enter today's semi-finals, Borg defeated Tony Roche of Australia 6-4, 6-2 and Harold Solomon beat Jeff Borowiak, also 6-4, 6-2, in afternoon matches. Friday evening, Gerulaitis defeated Sandy Mayer 6-4, 5-6, 6-3 and Drysdale upset seventh-seeded Eddie Dibbs 6-3, 6-2.

The play of the 36-year-old Drysdale has been the late surprise of the tournament, which also had an upset of top-seeded Jimmy Connors in the first round by Borowiak Monday.

Drysdale broke Dibbs's service in the fourth game, and controlled his own service games in dominating fashion. Drysdale was a last minute substitute in the field of 16 because Adriano Panatta is recuperating from an injury.

The winner of Sunday's final receives $60,000.

At Philadelphia, top-seeded Chris Evert scored a decisive 6-2, 6-1 triumph over Wendy Turnbull to gain a semi-final berth against Virginia Wade in a $100,000 women's tennis tournament.

Alberta Captures Seniors' Crown

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. (CP) — The Hadie Manley rink from Edmonton posted a 10-3 triumph over Dorothy McKenzie's Winnipeg foursome Friday to capture the Canadian senior women's curling championship.

The Manley rink of Bernie Durward, third; Dee McIntyre, second; and Anna Kasting, lead, was altered during the final when Kasting was forced to leave the game with an injured right foot during the seventh end.

She had injured the foot earlier in the week but was unable to continue in the final. She was replaced by Elsie May, a local curler who was allowed only to sweep.

The championship game was set up after the McKenzie rink advanced to the final by eliminating Betty Johnston of Saskatchewan 10-5 in the semi-final.

Manitoba had gone into play Friday in a three-way tie for the lead with Saskatchewan and Alberta. All three had 8-2 records.

However, Manitoba lost a 5-3 decision to the Manley rink in opening round play Friday and Saskatchewan won its morning game against Quebec 5-4.

Alberta drew the bye in the semi-final, leaving Manitoba and Saskatchewan to play in the Friday afternoon semi-final.

Home-owners!
Your attics are under-insulated and it's costing you money every day!
25% to 33% of your hard earned heat is lost if your attic is uninsulated (3" of insulation means you're 75% under insulated). Climb up and take a look for yourself. Less than eight inches of insulation is below the level recommended by the insulating experts at B.C. Hydro and the Federal Office of Energy Conservation. At today's rising fuel prices you can't afford to be under-insulated.
K-19 BLOWN-IN INSULATION . . .
K-19 blown cellulose insulation is ideally formulated for adding to your existing insulation or for fully insulating your home. It offers superior insulating qualities at a reasonable price. K-19 is blown into your walls and attic, without fuss or mess, from our truck. It flows into cracks and irregularities, assuring a uniform blanket to make your home more comfortable and pay for itself in fuel savings. Our expert crews can 'top up' your existing insulation in a few short hours, making your home warmer in winter and cooler in summer. An estimator would be pleased to call at your home to determine the amount of Therm-Attic needed and to advise you on FEDERAL GOV'T. GRANTS AND B.C. HYDRO FINANCING PLANS AVAILABLE.
DON'T FORGET THE WALLS
Yes, we do walls too . . . if your home is 17 or more years old chances are there is little, if any, insulation in your walls. A chilling thought — at today's home heating costs — an expensive and uncomfortable oversight. A phone call will bring an experienced estimator to determine the insulation your walls require to bring them up to B.C. Hydro recommended wall insulation levels. K-19 blown wall insulation can save hard-earned heat. The Federal Office of Energy Conservation states 'houses built before 1945 lose 20 to 40% of their heat through the exterior walls'. Act now and save.
INSIDE SLIDING INSULATING WINDOWS
WAIT . . . Before you let someone talk you into having your aluminum window glass replaced with double-glazed thermal units consider this: you already have half of your insulating windows now. The other half can be our sliding inside storm windows. The cost is substantially less. Our windows fit inside the existing windows and require no alterations to your present windows.

Leafs Drop First

POWELL RIVER — Esquimalt Maple Leafs came up first and Powell River Regals came up with the win Friday in the opening game of a best-of-three Coy Cup (British Columbia intermediate) quarter-final series.

Sparked by the two-goal performances of John Rouillard and Gord Hawkins, Regals bounced back from an early 2-1 deficit to defeat the South Island Big Six League champions 7-4.

"It was one of our poorest games of the season," said Maple Leaf manager Hank Klassen. "They didn't skate and couldn't score, although they had the chances."

Second game will be played tonight and a third, if necessary, is scheduled for Sunday afternoon.

ALBERTA'S SWINGIN' SUMMER

It starts in early July, with the world's biggest rodeo — the Calgary Stampede. But it's more than a rodeo. Hang onto your Stetson while you ride ferris wheels and rocket rides, take in chuckwagon races, stage shows, casinos, comedians, singing and dancing acts, and carry on till all hours in nightspots. For ten days you can enjoy pancake breakfasts served from a chuckwagon, square dance in the streets, and songs like Home on the Range become singalong hits again.

It's wild. It's carefree. And a million people get caught up in the fun. You will too.

But that's only the beginning. Take a couple of days to catch your breath, then head to Edmonton for Klondike Days — a chance to relive the Gold Rush - Gay '90s era. Residents and visitors alike dress up in silk vests, top hats, cutaway coats, spats, or ostrich plumes, bustles, parasols. Overnight the city becomes populated with Klondike Kates, sourdoughs and riverboat gamblers. Crowds form around roulette tables in the casinos. Others take their chances at the horse races. And you can enjoy every part of it — the infamous raft and bathtub races, the midway, the nightly Coliseum of Stars, carnival and cabaret — even a promenade to show off your finery.

It's another mammoth party. And you're invited.

There isn't another celebration like it in North America. Three weeks of excitement, action and non-stop enjoyment packed into July. You can make it your entire vacation, or part of your holiday. Plan to join the dress-up crowd and get your outfit here. We suggest you reserve early. Calgary and Edmonton are alive for the Stampede and Klondike Days, and tickets and accommodations are in high demand.

See you at the party.

All-Out War Launched on High Blood Pressure

By KARIN MOSER
Special to The Times

GENEVA — Last year hypertension-related diseases claimed more victims around the world than the combined total of those who perished in both world wars, says a senior medical officer for the World Health Organization (WHO).

This year, the WHO is waging its own war against the disease which claims millions of lives annually and ravages the health of at least 20 per cent of the world's adult population.

For the last 10 days a 30-man international committee of experts on high blood pressure disease has been meeting here to examine all the aspects of the disease and encourage the launching of community control projects on a global basis for the detection, screenings and treatment of high blood pressure victims.

In a meeting Tuesday with a group of international journalists, representing 20 countries, the committee strongly recommended that a hypertension prevention program be integrated with worldwide family planning programs to "reduce the incidence of oral contraceptive-related high blood pressure."

"We're now in the process of launching a large WHO project to study the effects of oral contraceptives in all countries," Dr. Joel Menard, France's representative on the committee, told reporters during a news conference.

"There is no doubt that in many cases the pill elevates blood pressure in women with a predisposition towards hypertension," he said. "It is pointless for us to urge family planning and distribute oral contraceptives without a prescription in underdeveloped countries without monitoring these women for hypertension."

The committee is also calling for screening programs of adolescents who may have kidney-related hypertension; is urging full-scale education programs for the world's population, and is stressing the need for salt-restricted diets.

Some manufacturers of baby foods are already eliminating salt from formulas in a bid to lessen the incidence of high blood pressure in children genetically predisposed to hypertension.

The committee also urges anyone, especially the under-30 age group, to take appropriate steps to solve problems of overweight through better eating habits and low-cholesterol diets. There are an estimated 21 million hypertensives in the U.S. alone and at least 200,000 in Canada. The Soviet Union is running neck-and-neck with the U.S. figures.

Between 60 and 80 million people in China suffer from hypertension as do five million in France; five to six million in Britain, and about 500,000 in Switzerland.

Last year, more than one million North Americans died from diseases involving high blood pressure.

"It's an insidious disease," says Dr. Toma Strasser, senior medical officer for WHO's cardiovascular disease unit, "In that its victims may experience no symptoms whatsoever. It's a silent killer, a secret threat, to the health of people around the world.

"It's complications are among the most important causes of death and incapacity in the world. As high blood pressure rises, so does the risk of stroke and coronary heart diseases."

Hypertension can cause substantial damage to the brain, vision and the kidneys.

In Japan, where the salt intake of the population is three times that of Western countries, the incidence of stroke is higher than anyone else in the world.

But a preventive program aimed at screening the population, teaching patients to use anti-hypertensive drugs and change their eating habits, is beginning to pay off.

In the U.S. and Canada, emphasis on a reduction of cigarette intake, exercise programs and blood-pressure detection programs in shopping centres, schools and other public areas, is also helping to bring more people under control.

In Osaka, in 1964, 50 per cent of the population was not identified for blood pressure problems. Of the remaining 50 per cent, 37 per cent was identified but went untreated and 13 per cent underwent treatment.

By 1974, with a stepped up screening and prevention program, only 14 per cent of the population had not been identified, 27 per cent was recognized but remained untreated and 58 per cent was undergoing effective treatment.

As high blood pressure begins to affect the various organs of the body, the patient may begin to suffer from dizzy spells, headaches, fatigue, palpitations and vision disturbances.

What is high blood pressure? Blood pressure levels are given in two numbers. The high number is the systolic pressure at the time the heart contracts. The low number represents diastolic pressure, or the interval between heartbeats. A normal blood pressure reading for people in their 40s would be 140-90 or less. Ideally, in young people, the reading should be about 120-80.

In a healthy circulatory system the heart pumps blood through the arteries of the body. These taper down to smaller arteries called arterioles. Under the influence of nerve impulses these arterioles can become larger or contract. When they contract, the heart must pump harder to force the blood through the system, and the result is hypertension.

If detected early, damage to arteries and the brain can be averted by giving the patient appropriate medication. But it is imperative that the patient take the medication as prescribed and probably over a long period of time.

New drugs with fewer side effects are making such therapy more palatable for victims of hypertension.

WHO has chosen hypertension as its 1978 theme with a worldwide effort to bring the disease under control. The slogan, Down With High Blood Pressure, will be circulated globally on April 7, designated world health day.

Hypertension Cost is High

GENEVA — The World Health Organization Wednesday urged countries around the world to implement effective community control programs to fight hypertension or run the risk of watching billions of dollars being flushed down the economic drain.

Do you realize that in recent years, the U.S. has spent as much as 4.3 per cent of its entire gross national product to cover the direct costs of treating cardiovascular disease often brough on by high blood pressure, Dr. Toma Strasser told a gathering of international science writers attending a WHO hypertension symposium held here this week.

"In 1969, one per cent of the U.K.'s entire gross national product was absorbed in costs related directly to treating heart disease, not research, mind you, just treatment.

Yugoslavia's gross national product was also reduced a full one per cent and the Swiss sank 592 million francs into heart ailments.

"Now add the amount of money being spent by countries around the world for research into the prevention of cardiovascular diseases and you can see the incredible paradox," the senior medical officer of the WHO's cardiovascular disease unit, told a news conference.

In the province of Ontario alone, the Heart Foundation's research commitment last year was $4.5 million representing the largest single source of cardiovascular research funding in Canada.

Most of the millions of Canadian dollars invested go towards research aimed at reducing the incidence of heart attack and stroke. Both conditions are frequently precipitated by high blood pressure—either undiagnosed or untreated.

More than 100,000 Canadians are stricken by a heart attack every year. Of these, approximately 4,000 die in the first year after they are discharged from hospital following such an attack. Out of every 10 deaths that occurs in Canada, two will be due to myocardial infarction.

SAUDI ARABIA AIDING UN

ROME (Reuter) — Saudi Arabia is giving $55 million in cash to the United Nations' world food program for 1979-80, the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO) has announced.

This makes Saudi Arabia the biggest donor in cash and the third-largest contributor in total, taking into account other pledges for gifts of commodities or services.

The contribution brings the fund for 1979-80 to $689 million, compared with a target set by the UN and FAO of $950 million.

'I'm the Boss, So Destroy It'

TORONTO (CP) — A senior federal civil servant defended on Thursday his decision to destroy — at a cost of $4,000 — a special Christmas issue of an employees' publication because his seasonal message was not prominently displayed.

"I happen to be the boss," said John D. Boyd, executive director of the Ontario region of the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission. "If you're sending out a Chistmas message to the staff, you don't expect it to be lodged away in a corner of the newspaper."

Boyd said in an interview the decision is "not going to cost the public anything" because the February and March issues of the publication, Tempo, were combined, saving $2,500, and another two monthly issues will be combined during the summer.

The Christmas issue message was originally at the bottom of a page without a headline. In the reprinted version, the message was at the top of the page with a border around it.

The Christmas issue, with a special color cover, originally cost $3,500 for 8,000 copies, $1,000 more than a regular issue. Reprinting it with the changes cost $4,000 because of overtime required to get it into the hands of employees by Dec. 22.

Boyd said it all happened because the paper was put together badly, without proofs being sent to him for approval.

"I don't apologize for doing it. I'd make the same decision again. And my bosses, if they don't like it, will let me know."

Growth Pain Plagues Katimavik

OTTAWA (CP) — The government's $10-million youth program now is more than six months old, and its officials admit it has had its share of complaints, controversies and growing pains.

But most of the controversies are unfounded, officials say, and some have been blown out of proportion by the media.

Organizers of the Katimavik program, nicknamed Barney's army after Defence Minister Barney Danson, say they fear bad press will turn off future applicants to the program for youths between 17 and 22.

Problems in Katimavik, an Inuit word for meeting place, have included:

—Two youths in a project in Gravelbourg, Sask., expelled because they were known to associate with other youths who were thought to be marijuana users. One of Katimavik's basic rules bans the use of illicit drugs, but the spokesmen said the two youths were never found using drugs.

—The firing of about 10 of the program's almost 100 project leaders for laziness, poor performance or an inability to organize and keep a project on track.

Gilles Latour, the program's director of information, said one or two of those leaders were fired for disobeying Katimavik's prohibition on cohabitation. About 20 other leaders have quit, some because of the strain of an almost round-the-clock job. He said the selection process for leaders is being changed.

—Renting a house in Halifax owned by Brian Fleming, who works in Prime Minister Trudeau's office. The house was rented for $800 a month through an agent, Latour said. The group did not know of any connection with the prime minister's office. The group will move out of the house when the lease expires in May.

—General complaints about the type and amount of work involved in the various projects. Karen Gibson, 22, of Toronto, who quite Katimavik after five months, called the project she was working on "a waste of my time and the taxpayer's money." She said she did not think "the government should be running a babysitting service for middle-class kids."

—Criticisms about a project at Prescott, Ont., where a Katimavik group of about 30 worked on ice sculptures for a local winter carnival. Organizers of the carnival were forced to cut back on some of its projects and the ice sculpture project was dropped after one week.

But Latour dismissed criticisms about this project with a "so what".

He said he found criticism about the ice sculptures "rather ridiculous" and said it was fulfilling one of the main aims of the Katimavik program — to help community-oriented projects.

Another problem was at the project at Wasaga Beach, Ont., whem members of the group threatened to go on strike when not allowed to go home at Christmas, Latour said.

He said the program had made such a rule in attempts to encourage the almost 1,000 youths to get involved in their host communities.

In a letter released by Dan McKenzie (PC—Winnipeg South Centre) Tuesday, the father of one Katimavik worker in the Collingwood, Ont., area complained his son could not at first get the medical attention he needed because the doctor demanded a fee before seeing the youth. The letter was written to Danson, who conceived the idea for Katimavik, and is responsible for the program to cabinet.

"In as much as your program pays $1 per day to the participants, the $8 fee plus $5 for medicine is difficult to pay," Dr. W. Reid Waters, a medical doctor wrote. Youths who finish the 10-month program also receive $1,000.

Eric Acker, Danson's special assistant, said following Dr. Waters' letter a special fund was set up at all Katimavik projects to pay medical and drug charges for the youths.

Another letter released by McKenzie was written by Jean McKeever of St. James, Man., who left the program after four months.

Miss McKeever complained about disorganization in the program, ill-trained leaders, and being used as a cheap source of labor. She was in a project to restore parts of the Halifax Citadel and complained about boring work.

Latour said criticisms about boring work are unfair. The youths were not promised interesting work all the time, they were promised a chance to have new experiences, to travel and to meet new people.

As for being a cheap source of labor, the projects are carefully screened to make sure that the youth corps is not used to take away jobs from the ordinary work force, he said.

He said no record is kept of complaints versus compliments, but the program is getting plenty of praise from community groups and from the youths themselves.

Vote Path Cleared

GARDENING
jack beastall

An untold number of authors have given their theories on how a compost heap should be made and managed. The result has been to portray compost as an object of veneration, to imply that mystery and magic play an important part in its production, and to so confuse the average home gardener that tons of much needed humus are annually dumped or burned.

Yet the basic principles of decomposing organic matter are well understood by all students of horticulture and can be stated in simple terms for the layman to grasp and adapt.

The primary aim is to produce organic material in a suitable form for incorporation into the soil to improve its physical structure, increase its capacity for holding water and plant nutrients, and to provide conditions for the multiplication and activities of micro-organisms that release plant foods, change complex chemicals to simple forms that plants can use, and absorb toxic gases which are products of plant growth and plant discards.

To be suitable the plant material must not be too dry nor too wet and sticky, free from disease organisms, weed seeds, and toxic substances. These end conditions can be obtained with almost any waste organic material as a beginning, although different materials may need slightly different treatment.

The reason organic material from plants is not put into the soil in its raw state is because most garden wastes cannot satisfy all of the above conditions.

In the process of rotting, hundreds of different kinds of microbial organisms multiply in vast numbers when conditions are suitable.

Their food is obtained by the action of enzymes or ferments secreted from their bodies which act chemically upon the complex substances that compose the organic material, breaking them down into more simple substances, mainly sugars and amino acids which the organisms use as sources of energy and growth. As the bacteria and fugi die, their bodies undergo similar decomposition.

In this intense activity, sugars are used in the respiration of the bacteria and are decomposed into carbon dioxide and water with the release of energy in the form of heat. The carbon dioxide escapes into the air.

When the volume of material within the heap is considerably greater than the exposed surfaces, heat will be generated faster than it is lost and the temperature will rise to between 82 and 94 degrees Celsius. This heat is sufficient in a properly managed heap to kill most disease producing organisms, insects, and weed seeds.

Many of the species of micro-organisms which start the processes of decomposition are destroyed in the heat produced by their activities and the processes are carried on by other species which thrive only in high temperatures.

The result of the composting process is:

(1) The disappearance of much of the original carbon in the waste material in the form of carbon dioxide;

(2) A marked increase in simpler substances and soluble nitrogenous compounds;

(3) A considerable temperature rise resulting in partial sterilization, the loss of water and usually considerable amounts of nitrogen in the form of ammonia.

The ratio of carbon to nitrogen in the original waste materials is important, but too involved to explain in detail here.

It shows why such materials as sawdust and paper, both almost wholly carbonaceous and lacking in nitrogen, cause a nitrogen deficiency in plants when added to the soil, and are slow to break down in compost heaps unless mixed with considerable nitrogenous material such as ammonia, munures, and green plant wastes.

Providing the gardener maintains a good mixture of materials and not one type of material alone, the carbon-nitrogen ratio will take care of itself in most instances.

The first point to ensure when making a compost heap is that a reation is adequate since oxygen is essential to the respiration of decay-producing organisms.

Anaerobic organisms, those not needing oxygen, can attack organic matter but the products of their activities are undesirable, smelly, and produced with very little heat.

To have the best volume to surface ratio, heaps built in the open should be at least five feet high, five feet wide, and any length over five feet when first built.

If sufficient material cannot be collected to build a heap with these dimensions the compost is best made in a "box" about three feet square and four feet high.

Such a box needs a two-inch spacing between the side planks for adequate air circulation. If built of hollow tiles some should be laid flat to give the same area of openings as the plank spacing.

No bottom to the box is needed, nor is it desirable. The soil base is loosened and lightly turned before the heap is started so that the soil organisms have easy access to the waste materials. When a wooden or concrete floor is used the heap has to be inoculated with rich soil between every layer, and few gardens have sufficient good soil for this purpose.

Enough material to build the entire heap should be gathered in advance, otherwise the volume will not be sufficient for the amount of bacterial action necessary to create the desired temperature for breaking down and sterilization.

Next Saturday the method of building a compost heap to obtain a satisfactory product for incorporation into the soil will be outlined, together with a list of household and plant wastes that can be converted into the humus which is lacking in all local soils.

Work for Week

Roses in all locations can be pruned this weekend since the weather pattern seems reasonably safe for such work.

Soil is gradually drying, too, making it possible to cultivate in all but gardens with a heavy clay base. However, sometimes a raised bed can be contrived with the aid of soil from an old compost heap. Use this for early vegetable sowing of quick growing seed.

Prick out the tomato seedlings sown in mid march; use three-inch pots. Give good light but little water. Growth must be steady but not forced with heat and poor light.

During the week, sow seed of sweet pepper, eggplant and okra in greenhouse or warm sunporch.

Also in warm porch or greenhouse sow seeds of following flowering annuals: asters (look for Spider type); zinnias (separate colors make a good show); African marigolds, dwarfs are good for balconies, patios, where tubs or planters will be filled with color all season.

Balcony vegetable growing making headway in last warm days. Sacking cover or other cotton material at night retains heat.

Rarotonga's hospitality

Tipping is taboo on Pacific Island

RAROTONGA, COOK ISLANDS — Rarotonga's international airport greets you with the usual signs: Health. Immigration. Customs.

As you might guess, the idea of tourism is new to Rarotonga. It's that unspoiled island travellers hunt, but rarely find.

Rarotonga is capital of the Cook Islands, a collection of 15 Polynesian islands, totalling just 93 square miles of dry land, scattered over on 850,000-square-mile expanse of the South Pacific.

It's also the largest island in the group. Not that it's big. It's a flat 20-mile bicycle ride around Rarotonga, and a week's stay will put you on smiling and speaking terms with dozens of the 11,500 residents.

Lacking a good harbor, Rarotonga was long isolated except for supply ships and the occasional cruise liner that paused offshore. Then the first jets thundered down at a new airstrip beside the lagoon in late 1973, and the first deluxe resort hotel opened last year.

The first papaa (strangers) to see Rarotonga were Fletcher Christian and the mutinous crew of the Bounty. They stopped by in 1789, and local tradition credits the arrival of oranges to them. A Rarotongan who paddled out to trade stole a box of the fruit!

Preoccupied with the quest for a haven, Christian sailed on, and Rarotonga returned to obscurity. In 1814, a sandalwooder, the Cumberland of Sydney, anchored in the lagoon. Cook Islands' legend attributes to the Cumberland the dubious honor of introducing the flea!

The London Missionary Society's redoubtable Reverend John Williams arrived in 1823 aboard the Endeavour to change the course of the island history. He didn't tarry long since the locals seemed a bit weary of papaa ships, but he left behind as missionary the Tahitian convert Papeiha.

Papeiha and later teachers did their work well. The old gods were toppled, and it wasn't many years before Rarotongans themselves were sailing abroad as missionaries!

Landing on Rarotonga, you'll find yourself on the classic South Pacific "high" island. A narrow coastal plain slopes to jagged volcanic highlands. An encircling reef encloses a turquoise lagoon, and outside this barrier, the deep sea is cobalt blue.

The Cook Islands Maoris are first cousins to Polynesians everywhere, sharing similar languages, legends, voyaging traditions, and a universal joie de vivre. They're particularly close to the New Zealand Maori, since it was from Rarotonga that seven great canoes sailed south in 1350. Seven small stones now mark the launching site opposite Ngatangiia Passage.

Even with its old isolation shattered, Rarotonga is still a refuge from the frenetic 20th century, a place where sightseeing is best geared to the clop-clop pace of a horse-drawn tour buggy.

You might then cross the street to the Banana Court tavern. On certain days, the Totalisator windows on its veranda are busy as islanders bet on the New Zealand races. Just ask, and you'll find a local happy to explain the betting system and help you pick a winner on a 25¢ ticket.

After the Banana Court, you'll stroll on to visit the Philatelic Society across from the Post Office, view the museum's shell collection, or peek into Avarua's 130-year-old Cook Islands Christian Church.

It's possible to wile away the better part of a day watching an inter-island freighter prepare to sail. Hordes of well-wishers, plumeria leis and chaplets, laughter and tears mark the event. The farewell tears are real, as some of the northern atolls lie more than 600 miles from Rarotonga.

On another day, you might reach the pier near the market just as elementary school boys and girls arrive to celebrate release from books with a swim. School uniforms serve as bathing suits. You'll exhaust a roll of film immediately on these far-from-camera-shy children.

The hulk of the brigantine Yankee, wrecked in 1964, lies on the reef beyond the splashing school children.

On yet another day, you might hike to the top of "The Needle," and afterwards enjoy a swim in a waterfall-fed pool. Or you might hire a bicycle or moped (you'll need a license) and circle the island. It's total garden all the way round.

A walk or a horseback ride along a quiet beach will put you in touch with lagoon activity. You'll see men with their throwing nets wading in the shallows, women searching low-tide reef for shell delicacies, or perhaps a group organizing a fish drive.

Of course, you can enjoy all the conventional lagoon activities for tourists: snorkeling, swimming, reef walks, paddling an outrigger canoe, and viewing coral from a glassbottom boat.

On Saturday night (or any night except Sunday), you can enjoy an "Island Night" marked by the beat of drums as Rarotongans celebrate with the lively dances at which they excel.

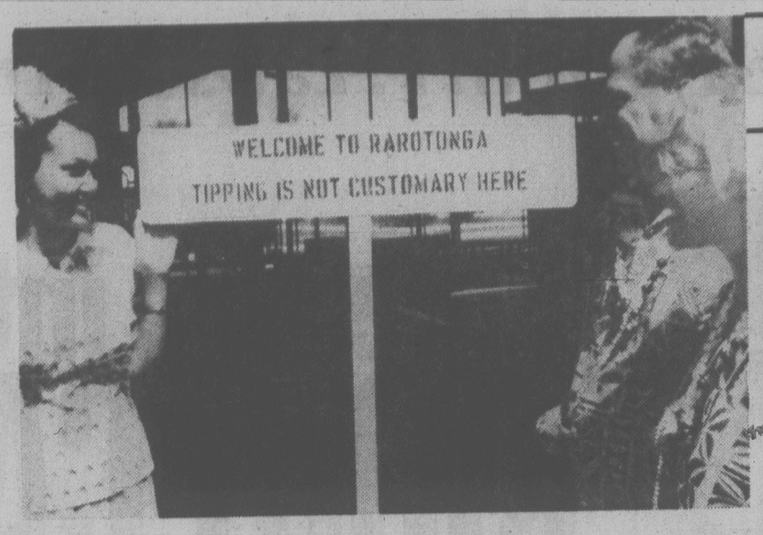
Come Sunday morning, you'll join Saturday night's dancers and their elders at church, and thrill to the extraordinary vocal power of a congregation joined in himene (songs) unaccompanied by instruments.

If you're in luck, you might witness Tere Tere Apii Sabati, when Sunday School children dressed in white recite Biblical verses before the congregation.

If an island where hotels ask guests not to embarrass staff by offering tips appeals to you, ask your travel agent to book your seat on Air New Zealand, the only airline serving Rarotonga from North America. Air New Zealand jets in from Honolulu or from Los Angeles via Tahiti.

Rarotonga is ideal for independent travellers interested in a slow paced, unprogrammed Islands circuit. However, Bennett Tours does include it in a South Pacific-plus-New Zealand and Australia tour program.

Despite its recent tourism debut, Rarotonga offers total travel comfort in the deluxe 150-room Rarotongan resort, located about six miles from Avarua, and in a handful of small establishments around the island. Just don't forget to book a hotel room before you leave home: Space is tight at some seasons and sleeping on the beach is discouraged!



AT Rarotonga's international airport, newly-arrived visitors are assured that 'no tipping' is no joke. Islanders consider custom contrary to proper etiquette of hospitality.

South America's tip attracts romantics

Spirit that moved Magellan washes over young and old

By JUAN de ONIS

PUNTA ARENAS, Chile — The spirit of exploration that led Ferdinand Magellan to discover the passage here between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans in 1520 still attracts travellers to this land's end of South America.

A yellow sedan with New York State licence plates and a hand-painted map on the trunk saying "New York to Tierra del Fuego" pulled into the central plaza here recently carrying two retired schoolteachers, Mrs. Rose Dunlap and Mrs. Marie Falcon, who live near Rochester.

They had driven from Montevideo, Uruguay, where the car had been shipped from New York, through Brazil and Paraguay to Argentina, and then down the lonely dirt roads of Patagonia to this isolated port on the Strait of Magellan in Chile.

"People back home think we are crazy, but it is such an experience reaching these far-off places on your own," said Mrs. Dunlap after gazing from the shore here at the distant outline of the island of Tierra del Fuego.

The two then drove off to the north to visit Chile, Bolivia, Peru, Ecuador and Colombia — a journey of 10,000 miles in all.

An even more intrepid pair of travellers turned up a short time after the two teachers. Two young Italians arrived aboard a craft like a catamaran, with two pontoons, a deck on which a tent was pitched, a mast and two outboard motors, in which they had sailed across the Atlantic from Gibraltar and down the coast of South America.

A short while ago, Francisco Esterovic, a local newspaperman, recalled, 12 motorcyclists from Los Angeles roared down the main street after riding the length of the continent.

"We get a lot of strange visitors," said Esterovic. "This place seems to attract romantics."

This region, made up of the province of Magallanes on the mainland and Tierra del Fuego and other islands, seems like a combination of Alaska and Australia. The chill blue waters, whipped by fierce winds, contain a version of the king crab, and the lakes and streams, which are fed by glaciers, teem with big trout. The vast extensions of the Patagonian grasslands are populated with millions of sheep.

People on the docks were amazed when they heard that the two were planning to sail to Antarctica if they could get one of their motors repaired.

Oil has been found on both the mainland and Tierra del Fuego, and a big program of exploration has begun offshore at the eastern entrance to the Strait of Magellan, not far from Port Famine, where the first attempt to establish a Spanish colony ended in 1586 with only one of more than 350 settlers surviving.

After Chile became independent from Spain, military expeditions were sent to gain a foothold at what was regarded in the 19th century as a strategic location. Before the Panama Canal was built, all ships plying between the Atlantic and Pacific passed either through the strait or took the longer route around Cape Horn.

Punta Arenas was the only port for thousands of miles, and photographs taken at the turn of the century show the harbor full of schooners and steamships flying the colors of many nations.

The merchants of Punta Arenas, who were also the large landowners, exported large quantities of wool after Jose Nogueira, a seal hunter, brought the first sheep from the British Falkland Islands and began a boom in sheep herding here. They opened banks, such as the Bank of Punta Arenas and London, and from this port supplied most of Argentine Patagonia with imported goods.

The "golden era," during which the wealthy built Victorian mansions here and spent the winters in London or Paris, was followed by decline and isolation after the Panama Canal altered maritime routes and both Argentina and Chile imposed customs controls restricting the free trade in this region.

Only about 110,000 people live in the region now, largely small merchants, civil servants and military personnel in this city, and sheep farmers, fishermen and oil workers scattered over the prairies and islands.

But these people of pioneer stock, accustomed to a hard climate in winter and little help from the capital, are confident that a revival is coming. Oil and gas production here is important, but provides no revenue to the area. More promising is tourism, a project to build a modern port with bunkering facilities for ships coming round the tip of South America, and recent investments in industries using local raw materials, such as king crabs and other marine products.

"If the government would declare this region a tax-free zone for those of us who live here so that we could invest instead of paying taxes then there would be a boom here," said Alfredo Arecheta, an automobile dealer, who meets with his businessmen friends at the Club de La Union for a round of dice and the daily gossip.

A century ago, when Punta Arenas still had palisades and fortifications, this region was populated by nomadic Indians, roaming the Patagonian hunting lands southward from the Santa Cruz River in Argentina.

Chiefs of the Tehuelches, such as Casimiro and his son, Sam Slick, were frequent visitors. They brought hides of the guanaco, an animal like the llama and alpaca, or feathers of ostriches, which they traded for guns, beads and spirits.

British missionaries from the Patagonian Missionary Society tried to win the tribes to Christianity in rivalry with the Roman Catholic missions.

Some 11,000 Indians of the Tehuelche, Ona, Yagana and Alcalufe "nations" were believed to have been in the region in 1887; in 1945 missionaries estimated the number at 400. Some say the Alcalufes have now disappeared.

As in the American experience, the reasons are debated, but most historians agree that venereal disease, alcohol and the closing to the Indians of their hunting areas by the advance of the sheep ranches were the main factors.

All Spanish paths lead south

ON THE GO
With Jerry Hulse

MADRID — It's a curious thing about North American tourists: when it comes to Spain, generally, they have one-track minds.

That it to say, they all go south. Or the majority do, anyway. (Pity the poor northerners who could use a few dollars themselves.)

Perhaps it's because Madrid isn't really old Spain, which is what the tourist is actually seeking. The fact is, mid-town Madrid is a little like Manhattan. Only with a Spanish accent. Tall buildings, flashy hotels and such.

As European capitals go, Madrid is still an infant, younger even than St. Petersburg, Fla. So it's got some youthful ideas. Like keeping the lights blazing in the nightclubs till 3 o'clock in the morning. Sometimes even later.

Jets wing their way in from North America, landing at Barajas Airport. Once settled, the crowds still do the one-way tour to the Valley of tche Fallen, the monastery of the Escorial, Toledo, etc. (I sometimes suspect that North American travellers are tormented by a guilt complex which spurs them on to see even those monuments which bore them silly.)

In Madrid, providing this is a first visit, the tourist checks off the city's major attractions: the Prado (north every moment), Retiro Park, the Palacio Real, Plaza Mayor, and the Rastro.

Being North Americans, no doubt they scratch these items off their lists with alacrity. Two days, perhaps. Maybe less, providing they're in a rush.

Afterward they turn south. Seville, of course. Granada, certainly. But Torremolinos? This chic seaside resort was nothing more than a sleepy fishing village along the Costa del Sol just a few years ago. Donkeys moved back and forth along twisting paths and fishermen spread their nets beside the sea. Gulls cried and sandpipers ran in rhythm with the waves.

Torremolinos was the gem of the Costa del Sol.

Well, nothing remains the same. Today Torremolinos is more like Miami or Waikiki. High-rise hotels and condominiums crowd its shores. I recall when we would take a table along Calle de Caule. It was pleasant, dining outside. The sun was hot and the sangria was icy cold. No one rushed.

The villagers of Torremolinos were in no hurry.

And so now it has changed. It is popular, yes, but it is also crowded. Terribly crowded.

I prefer Marbella, even though it, too, has acquired its share of high-rises. Only a short drive from Torremolinos, it relates to the Costa de Sol as Palm Beach relates to Florida. If one enjoys golf, well Marbella is a satisfactory choice.

Stretching for 150 miles between Almeria and Algeciras, the Costa del Sol takes in hill towns as well as coastal villages — Mijas and Casares being the dreamiest.

Of the two, Mijas is the more popular. The reason for this is that it was discovered years ago by the tourists. First came the Phoenicians, then the Greeks, the Romans, the British and now the North Americans.

Mijas sits, one senses, at the very top of the world, or so it would seem, for the cliffs fall away hundreds of feet to the sea below.

It is worth a day or two, this tiny village, on anyone's itinerary.

Down the coast Casares sleeps peacefully in mountains behind the Costa del Sol. Casares is far quieter than Mijas. This is because fewer tourists have made its discovery. When we approached the village a single policeman waved us to a parking place.

He was unneeded, really. In Casares, there is no crime. Well, almost no crime. Occasionally someone will drink a little too much wine and get into an argument with someone. But seldom does anything serious occur.

Casares lies roughly 60 miles west of Torremolinos. The mountain road ends there. Suddenly. Without warning. You can go no further.

Its houses are white, blindingly white; they are in a hilltop setting surrounding the public fountain which in turn is surrounded by eucalyptus and pine.

Like Mijas, the streets of Casares are cobbled and its rooftops are tiled, and donkey carts clatter noisily through the alleys.

Its most distinguished guest was Julius Caesar. Indeed, it was he who gave Casares its name.

Now the children of Casares play among Roman ruins and crawl through a castle built for the Moors.

Well, even though the tourists haven't discovered Casares, they know of course about Seville. Nearly everyone travelling south from Madrid stops in Seville. As any schoolchild knows, Seville was the home of Carmen as well as Velasquez and Murillo and Peter the Cruel.

The Alcazar, where Peter murdered his brother, was built by Moorish rulers in the 12th century and later occupied by Christian kings.

It was to Seville that Columbus made his triumphant return after discovering America. Now visitors file past his tomb in the huge Cathedral of Seville.

Never mind that he happens to be buried in the Dominican Republic and Havana as well. Spaniards claim that the real Christopher Columbus rests in Seville.

Nearby his son Fernando is entombed, along with Peter the Cruel and his spouse, Maria de Padilla. (Every tourist and student who comes to Seville gets these refresher courses in Spanish history).

Unlike Madrid, Seville is old Iberia. Narrow alleys and whitewashed houses crowd the Moorish sections, surrounding courtyards with their musical fountain and bougainvillea which spills from the walls.

"Nobody much seems to go to Korea. Do you know anything about it?"

Taxis are cheap. There's no tipping anywhere. Food is like Japanese. Roast beef on the Hotel Chosun menu turned out to be a kind of sukiyaki cooked on a hot plate built into the table.

Kimchee — pickled cabbage — is treated like a national monument. Everybody says: "Have you tried Kimchee yet?" So you'd better try it or they'll push it down your throat.

Good night clubs with gorgeous women. No women allowed in some rooms after 10 o'clock. They've got a guard to snatch them out of the elevators. But the night clubs on the roof of the hotels urge you to hire a hostess at $12 for three hours. The Chosun must have 50 of them.

What's wrong with it? Language is a real barrier. Nobody talks English. No way of operating in town restaurants because you can't read the menus. No way to talk in stores except at the hotels.

But — these hostesses speak English. Look one up to take you around town.

In the little town of Ennis, Ireland, where the Shannon flows, I found "The Book of Irish Curses." You shouldn't be without it.

"May I meet him with one tooth and it achin', and one eye to be seeing seven and seventy devils in the twists of the road, and one old timber leg on him to limp into the scaldin' grave."

Irish curses are more of a spell than just bum-rapping somebody.

"Sure, it was St. Patrick himself who cursed the man who stole his goat to make the skin into a drum."

So said the book shopkeeper to me. A book as handy as a dictionary.

We have thought of visiting Guatemala but are somewhat alarmed because of the recent earthquake . . ." Nearly all the Central American countries shake, rattle and roll occasionally but I can only recall two serious ones in the last quarter of a century.

Most of the earth movement is so minor you don't really feel it. If you do feel something go bump in the night, look up at the chandelier or a hanging flower pot. If it is swinging, get under a table. (The problem is, the first shake is usually the one that is so strong you don't have time to get under the table. Anyway, I go to Central America, Japan, Iran and other shaky countries without worrying too much about it.)

War of Posters Splits Peking Campus

By JOHN FRASER

PEKING — A full-scale poster war has broken out at Peking University as a result of new entrance requirements and the authorities are fighting back hard — also with posters.

Examinations are at the heart of the problem. The newest students, enrolled last month, were chosen through a revived examination system, whereas the second and third-year students are the last remnants of the Cultural Revolution system of selection which stressed political rectitude and class origins over anything else.

The big-character posters — Dazibaon as they are called — began appearing 10 days ago. The first blast came from a recent arrival who praised the examination system itself, adding that during the gang-of-four period students of proven merit were denied access to higher education. Peking University restricted itself, he said, to particular elements among the workers, peasants and soldiers, or, to quote the author himself, "uncultivated ignoramuses."

There was an immediate and passionate reaction from the older students, some of whom put up their own Dazibao accusing the newcomer of slander and calling for a retraction. One of the more outraged signs went somewhat beyond the debate and denounced "the restoration of the bourgeois class in China" and said that the present turn of events was a setback of 10 years in Chinese history.

Another student went so far as to compare China in this immediate post-Mao period to the Soviet Union after the death of Stalin (which in China means revisionism). He said that the older students were not being treated equitably and he resented their comparison to Chang Tieh-sheng, the notorious university student who handed in a blank examination paper as his protest against academia.

This older student concluded his poster by writing: "Glory to the last worker-peasant-soldier students." These signs went up some time last weekend and had been torn down by Sunday noon, but not before they were seen by a number of students, Chinese and foreign. Word of mouth did the rest.

They have provoked the university authorities who have taken to their own brush-pens and official Dazibao began appearing this week denouncing the most inflammatory of the older students signs. The entire university body is urged to unite with special solidarity and rid the campus of the last gang-of-four elements. An investigation is promised.

The appearance of a spirited and controversial Dazibao debate comes immediately after the proclamation of China's new constitution in which Chairman Mao's own words on the subject of Dazibao are written into article 45 in the section entitled Fundamental Rights and Duties of Citizens:

"Citizens enjoy freedom of speech, correspondence, the press, assembly, association, procession, demonstration and the freedom to strike, and have the right to (speak out freely, air their views fully, hold great debates and write big-character posters.)

The controversial and challenging Dazibao of the older students will be the first test of this article and according to sources at Peking University, a lot of people are waiting to see what comes next.

Vancouver Man Dares Tel To Cut Off His Pho. . .

VANCOUVER (CP) — Don Burdeny was in the middle of a speech daring the British Columbia Telephone Co. to disconnect his telephone lines because he is renting sequential dialling message machines.

Then his telephone lines went dead.

His dialling machine—which delivers a recorded message 1,000 times a day to those who answer at the numbers the machines dials in sequence—stopped in the middle of its spiel.

B.C. Tel says the machines will tie up telephone lines and harass customers, but Burdeny says that's only an excuse to keep him out of business.

"We're alleging a conspiracy between B.C. Tel and the Real Estate Board of Greater Vancouver because they're trying to stop us conducting business in this area," he said.

Burdeny said his company, ILS Realty, offers do-it-yourself kits to customers who would like to sell their homes on their own rather than pay commission to a real estate salesman, a move which he says has made him unpopular with the board.

And B.C. Tel is worried, he said, because he has won a franchise in Vancouver to sell telephone equipment, especially push-button telephones, to private consumers. He said about $1 million in telephone equipment will be placed on the market within the next few months.

"We've got a business, and it's being tampered with," said Burdeny. "We don't mind good competition, but this is ridiculous."

Burdeny said he has about 38 machines, but two companies using the machines have taken them out of service on orders from B.C. Tel.

Peter Lancaster, products support manager for B.C. Tel, said the company has received several complaints about the machine.

"We've got to protect our network against any sort of dialling arrangement that might interfere with it," he said. "We've got to abide by our rule governing abuse of lines and customers."

He said B.C. Tel is worried that a sequential dialer might call a person, then develop an electronic failure that would tie up the line.

"If that happened, that phone line would be tied up," he explained. "If it happened and you had an emergency, you would not be able to dial out.

"If you hang up on one of these machines, then lift the receiver again, it's still there. It stays there for the entire time it is programmed to give you."

School Taxes Rapped

VANCOUVER (CP) — Vancouver property owners are paying more each year to educate children from all over British Columbia, a panel of school board, city council, labor and teaching representatives concluded Wednesday.

Panelists said tax levy increases such as the latest planned five-point jump to 42.5 mills illustrate how property owners are becoming financially responsible for education while the government withdraws its support.

David Pratt, Vancouver school trustee, said that because Vancouver is B.C.'s major centre for facilities for handicapped and special students, children from other areas are moved here.

But the government, he said, is not contributing to the school board's extra costs.

"Special education should be funded 100 per cent provincially," he said. "But in spite of the raw deal we're getting, the government asks Vancouver to pay for institutions within our boundaries."

Norm Ornes, a Vancouver school principal and chairman of the B.C. Teachers' Federation's educational finance committee, said that for years, provincial governments paid 50 per cent of school costs. "In 1977, it was 43 per cent; in 1978, it looks like it will be down to 39 per cent," he said. "During the three (taxation) years of the present government, the mill-rate has increased 60.4 per cent. "It increased 1.6 per cent over the previous eight years, under two different governments," he said.

The board's final 1978 budget is $112 million, about six per cent more than last year.

Eunice Parker, Coquitlam school board chairman, representing the B.C. Home and School Federation, told the meeting some school boards last year received no provincial grants because local taxation covered their entire school costs.

"If the 42.5 mills raised by taxpayers meets local school costs, that board gets no money from the government," she said. "And if 42.5 mills raises more than school costs, the rest goes into provincial revenue — probably to another government department — not back to the taxpayers."

Alderman Harry Rankin of Vancouver said higher taxes are directly related to Vancouver's declining enrolment problem.

"People are being driven out of Vancouver because they can't afford to live here and have to settle in Surrey or Langley or Abbotsford where they have to build new schools," he said. "They're replacing homes and family units with bachelor suites and making it an executive city."

Phillipone Wins Again

VANCOUVER (CP) — Penthouse cabaret proprietor Joe Phillipone's conviction for attempting to bribe a liquor board official was reversed Thursday in the British Columbia Court of Appeal.

In a two-to-one decision the three-member court panel allowed Phillipone's appeal against conviction and a 30-month jail sentence imposed by County Court Judge John Spencer.

The Crown had alleged that Phillipone attempted to bribe Pia Tofino, a liquor board official, by offering her two bottles of liquor and a cake.

In writing the decision with which Justice J. D. Taggart concurred, Justice E. E. Hinkson said the gifts given by Phillipone to Tofino "did not bear the corrupt complexion" contended by the Crown.

Phillipone, his brother Ross Filippone, his sister Rose Filippone, the Penthouse, and two associates, were cleared earlier of a charge of living off the avails of prostitution.

The Supreme Court of Canada on March 7 refused leave for the Crown to appeal the Dec. 20 decision of the B.C. Court of Appeal which overturned a conviction on the charge.

Hooker Issue 'Exaggerated'

VANCOUVER (CP) — The lawyer who brought on the current controversy over what constitutes soliciting by a prostitute says Vancouver's police and mayor are exaggerating the situation.

Tony Serka, whose defence of a prostitute led the Supreme Court of Canada to a new definition of soliciting, said Thursday that police and civic officials are acting irresponsibly by refusing to enforce existing laws, just to get their way.

That way, he said in an interview, may be political as far as Mayor Jack Volrich is concerned, and a power play by police.

"It seems to me that a carefully-orchestrated plan is being carried out to get public backing for the authorities' contention that new, tough laws are needed to control prostitution," Serka said.

"But the Supreme Court ruling is not that radical or sweeping in its effect. The police are over-reacting by making no real effort to control the situation. I feel they are willing to let the situation get so bad that the public will speak out for new laws.

"All the (Supreme Court) decision did was limit legal action against prostitutes to actual soliciting in a public place — which is how it ought to be.

Colquitz Oil Spill Probed

An investigation is underway into an oil spill in Colquitz Creek Thursday.

Saanich Fire Chief Harold Gains said he will work with the municipal works department to try and determine the source of the oil.

The thin film of oil — not thick enough to kill fish — floated down a section of Colquitz Creek into Portage inlet Thursday.

"It's not the first time this has happened," said Lynne Spode, an employee of Aqua Science Consultant Ltd., which looks after federal fish trapping facilities in the creek.

"But the B.C. Pollution Control branch seems to do little about it."

The oil came from a storm drain which empties into the creek near Burnside Road, about two hundred yards from the Tillicum Outdoor Theatre.

"It's too bad," Spode said.

"This creek can support plenty of cutthroat trout. But in the last few years it seems to be declining as a fish producing waterway due to pollution and other causes."

She said last year 29 fish went upstream to spawn but this year only four were counted.

Gains said from time to time faulty connections from service stations or workshops cause pollution problems.

He said only recently raw gas poured from a storm drain into Portage Inlet.

"We traced it to a faulty connection in a service station gas pump" he said.

"The problem here may be the same."

He recalled as a boy seeing salmon so thick in the Colquits they were pitchforked out of the water.

"It could be the same if all levels of government would cooperate in making the federal salmon enhancement work," said Spode.

As she spoke, an 18-inch cutthroat weighing at least three pounds jumped in the fish trap.

"There could be hundreds like this in the creek if we took a little more care of our natural resources," she said.

Traps are maintained to count trout spawning in creek

Spraying Urged

Southern Vancouver Island homeowners are being urged to spray their fruit and ornamental trees to help control the European winter moth.

Jack Arrand, entomologist with the provincial agriculture ministry, recommends residents apply at least two sprays of methoxychlor when the eggs are hatching between early April and the first of May, although trees in bloom should not be sprayed.

Methoxychlor has a low mammalian toxicity and is not stored in body fat in humans or animals although it is moderately toxic to bees.

The Canadian Forest Service is introducing two European parasites to provide natural control of the moth, but it will take about five years for them to be effective.

A Parade Just For Children

That's the philosophy behind Kaleidoscope Theatre's decision to give the young people of Victoria their own day and their own parade.

It's nothing new for Kaleidoscope, Canada's most esteemed children's theatre, to come up with an innovative idea, and the result of this one is that April 1 is to be proclaimed by Victoria Mayor Mike Young as Kaleidoscope Day.

It will be marked by a parade and a downtown afternoon of fun for all the kids and any parents who might wish to take part.

Assembly for youngsters of all ages will take place at Beacon Hill Park's baseball diamond from 12 to 2 p.m. Children should bring their own costumes if possible but if not the Kaleidoscope Theatre company will outfit them.

Victoria NDP MLA Charles Barber will be marshall for the parade which is to start at 2 p.m.

The parade will proceed up Douglas and will finish at Market Square where there will be refreshments, entertainment, games and prizes and an entrant will be chosen to be crowned as April Fool.

Kaleidoscope hopes that the April Fool parade may become an annual event.

Protection For Trail

The historic Alexander Mackenzie-Grease Trail between Bella Coola and an area north of Quesnel will be protected and upgraded by the provincial government. The trail was first used by Indians as a trade route.

Japanese Sparking Price War On Roe

Interference from Japanese companies is causing a price war on the herring roe fishing grounds, says president Bill Hilborn of Oakland Fisheries Ltd. said.

"The competition has been caused by the interference of Japanese companies competing for the product and financially supporting numerous new buyers on the grounds," Hilborn said.

Hilborn said at least 10 new companies have been formed this year solely for the herring season.

Earlier this week, Jerry Spitz, who heads the Fisheries Association of B.C., said there are 58 companies competing for the herring roe this season compared to 15 in 1974.

Hilborn said many of the new companies have very little invested in plant facilities, often using a basic shed that meets fisheries' requirements.

The price war has resulted in some fishermen getting as much as $1,000 a ton for their catch on the fishing grounds. The agreed-upon minimum price was $440 a ton, compared to $285 in 1977.

Hilborn said, however, fishermen who have delivered catches to Oakland in past years are continuing to do so.

"Not all fishermen feel that an unrealistic pricing policy on the grounds is best for the long-term benefit of the industry.

"As for those companies with capital invested in plants and equipment it is also essential that they too receive a return for the continuation of the business."

Meanwhile, the fisheries department is still monitoring the Barkley Sound area, looking for the herring to appear there.

Black Magic . . . by Gina Paoli . . .

There's a truly exceptional black after-five dress at Gibson's this week . . . By Gina Paoli, it's hand-crotcheted in Italy . . . styled in the new above-the-floor length . . . with slip reaching just below the knee so that the lovely lacey skirt border shows to advantage . . . Separate top is very soft, very alluring . . . You might call this an "international" dress . . . It will go with you at any season to any part of the world . . . a traveller par excellence! . . . Another hand-crotcheted Gina Paoli with these same qualities comes in cream or peach silk . . . Same length as the black . . . elasticized neck which can be dropped on the shoulders for an extra-dressy look . . . Another off-the-floor silk knit with an understated frill at the bottom has a long, loose sleeve . . . Gibson's have this in both navy and cream, . . . it's a "forever" dress you'll never tire of . . . Daytime Gina Paoli dresses include a navy, red and white wool knit with soft, elbow sleeves and a separate scarf that's almost stole size . . . and a magnificent sporty wool knit pantsuit . . . Navy trousers . . . hand-knit short-sleeved red sweater . . . and the new short knit jacket in white trimmed with red and navy . . . A lot of zing for spring in these navy-red-white combinations! . . . Gibson's, 708 View St., 384-5913.

A beauty salon we'll swear by! . . .

Last week we were crossing Douglas St. from the Bay . . . enroute to the Charming Lady which is just opposite . . . when we caught sight of an acquaintance of ours, and were struck with how very nice she looked! . . . Only later did we learn that Mrs. X had just emerged from the Lady . . . certainly there was none of that "just come from the hairdresser" look about her you're so apt to see on the freshly-coiffed . . . Now this, to us, is just one more proof of what thorough "pros" all the Charming Lady staff are! . . . Their aim is to send people out looking smart, well-groomed . . . and above all, like THEMSELVES . . . and all so perfectly, so subtly and so expertly done that onlookers just think they look nicer, without being able to point a specific finger to their hair! . . . (We, of course, always think our hair looks fantastic after a visit to the Lady . . . but in between times we've been able to manage it ourselves because it's so expertly cut and permed) . . . Marty . . . who wields a pair of scissors like you wouldn't believe . . . tells us she aims for a soft, natural look that enhances a client's good features, and plays down her bad ones . . . The results look so simple, but actually it takes a lot of experience, know-how . . . and yes, artistry . . . to come up with this kind of perfection . . . expertise in cutting, perming, coloring, and hair care . . . In other words, the kind of service you get from all the stylists at . . . Charming Lady, 1712 Douglas St., 385-8133 and Witch's Hut, 728 View St., 388-7368.

The sheer luxury of pure silk . . .

Certainly we're all grateful for the various wonderful man-made fabrics which are used for so many of our clothes today . . . but let's not forget the industrious little silkworm . . . If only God can make a tree . . . only he can make pure silk . . . which has been prized from time immemorial right down to now! . . . With this preamble, we'll tell you that the Bay's Mirror Room has just received some pure silk dresses and suits that will make you drool! . . . The dresses are so light and airy they feel like fluff to the touch . . . Nice simple styles that manage to be up-to-the-minute and timeless . . . at one and the same time . . . One style is a shirt dress with braided buttons . . . Another has a narrow mandarin collar and braided buttons . . . while a third is a round-necked smock style . . . Some of the silks are plain, others feature fabric interest in small tone-on-tone designs . . . As for the colors, they're delicate and pretty . . . ivory, sky blue, pink, peach, tangerine and mint . . . Still in pure silk are the new summer suits . . . the color of French vanilla ice cream . . . Fitted tuxedo jacket, straight skirt with off-centre front pleat . . . real weskit vest with half belt in back . . . Each piece sold separately . . . Pure silk blouses in a number of luscious colors complete this handsome suit ensemble . . . The Bay Mirror Room, 385-1311, Loc. 280.

More goodies for your kitchen . . .

Bath & Kitchen . . . when it was just a bathroom shop . . . was always an interesting, fun place to browse in . . . but now that it's expanded to include kitchen things too . . . why, it's just TWICE as interesting! . . . A lot of the things come from Britain . . . they're extremely well made and well designed . . . Newly arrived last week is the "Caddymatic" a very neat and compact multi-purpose dispenser that attaches to the wall . . . (great space-saver in a small kitchen!) Two sizes in this . . . the small one great for tea, coffee, sugar, salt and the like because you just push a button for a measured amount . . . lid is tight so contents stay fresh . . . New, too, are the "Kitchen Devil" knives, made of surgical steel, and bearing a life-time guarantee . . . They come in many sizes and for many purposes . . . We were intrigued with the multi-purpose salad knife and parer which you can adjust for thickness of paring . . . and reverse for either right or left hand . . . And there's a real super sharpening steel . . . quite a small gadget which we're assured does a terrific job of sharpening serated edged knives, as well as regular edged ones, and all kinds of scissors . . . Other useful gadgets are the plastic spaghetti server, in assorted colors . . . A rubber gripper to open jars . . . as well as tighten them . . . and funnels that won't let liquids overflow . . . See them all at . . . Bath & Kitchen, James Bay Square, Simcoe & Menzies St., 385-2523.

Colonial beauties! . . .

Most of the colonial lamps we've seen in the past tend to run heavily to colorful floral designs . . . but Standard Furniture has just received a shipment of colonial lamps from the U.S. which are truly distinguished . . . completely beautiful! . . . They have such clean handsome lines . . . designs, when present, are small and subtle . . . Softly gleaming brass is used for many of the bases, though there are some with hand-blown glass bases . . . usually with a lamp inside . . . The painting, in subdued colors, is all hand-done too . . . We noticed one lamp with the appearance of lace . . . Another is cut crystal . . . and yet another, clear glass trimmed with gold leaf . . . In this colonial group there are table and floor lamps . . . lamps for boudoir or desk . . . swags which fit in just about anywhere . . . Some of these latter have lights in the bottom . . . If your taste in home decor turns to the colonial . . . be sure to see these handsome lamps . . . which could well be the crowning touch in a room! . . . For a real functional lamp that you can put anywhere in your home without interfering with the decor . . . have a look at Standard's "Pharmacy lamps" in shining brass or antique bronze . . . They're adjustable, swivel standing lamps you can set to just the right height for reading, sewing or whatever . . . These are so popular that Standard actually have trouble keeping them in stock! . . . Standard Furniture Co., 737 Yates St., 382-5111.

Summer days will soon be with us . . .

Now that spring has finally sprung . . . summer will soon be upon us . . . and the need for such cool, summer dresses as we saw at Wilson's on Monday . . . It's not a minute too soon to pick one up, either . . . because we've a feeling they won't be around too long! . . . There's a charming Edith Strauss sleeveless dress in cotton with floral design . . . a small print in the bodice, and a larger floral print in the flounced skirt . . . Red, blue or green with white, priced at $110 . . . Another Edith Strauss sundress is a fine Swiss cotton with chevron stripes . . . Navy with blue, red, yellow and green stripes . . . $80 . . . We like the Malia of Honolulu sundress in cotton pique . . . with narrow straps which tie on the shoulder . . . This one's black with red and white or green and white flowers . . . Price tag reads $95 . . . and we doubt if you'd find anything more attractive if you went to Honolulu in person! . . . One of the most useful garments you could own would be one of the Hooper polyester knit dresses with boat neck and just a hint of a cap sleeve at the shoulder . . . White with stripes of navy, green or red . . . priced at just $50! . . . You'll probably want more than one of these Hoopers . . . they're so eminently wearable . . . so easily washable . . . so perfect for travelling (just roll up and cram into a suitcase) . . . W. & J. Wilson Limited, 1221 Government St., 383-7177 and 1210 Newport Ave., 592-2821.

Will Female Pooch Outlive Her Brother?

By Dr. FRANK MILLER

DEAR DR. MILLER: Just read where women are living longer and longer than men are. Because I have a male and female dog from the same litter, I am naturally wondering if she is likely to outlive him? — T. G.

DEAR T. G.: If there are statistics on whether aged female dogs live longer than aged males, I am unaware of them. Odds are, however, that from birth the average female canine has a longer lifespan than the male primarily because males are more prone to roam and therefore are a greater risk as far as exposure to disease, poisonings and various other types of injuries. A female is less inclined to roam, especially if she is spayed, and this is increasingly the case.

DEAR DR. MILLER: Could Cologne, my five-year-old skunk, have roundworms? Lately she has been coughing and gagging just like my puppy did when he had roundworms. Or do skunks ever get them? — K. T.

DEAR K. T.: Cologne could have roundworms. Skunks do. But, as with a dog, if roundworms are going to be a problem, it's usually when they are young. Odds are your veterinarian will discover Cologne's coughing is caused by something entirely different. There are a great many possibilities.

DEAR DR. MILLER: My poor paraket got deathly sick just overnight, was breathing terribly hard and died of pneumonia before the doctor could do anything for him. I have had other birds over the years, some old and some not old enough who died and were breathing hard just like it. Is it possible they all died because of pneumonia, too? — T. D.

DEAR T. D.: It's possible but not probable. While pneumonia is often the fatal finale to an illness in many species, including birds, pneumonia as a basic cause of disease is not all that common in parakeets. Birds severely stressed from whatever cause are likely to show increased difficulty with respiration.

DEAR DR. MILLER: Is feeding orphan puppies as hard as feeding baby birds? I have successfully done the latter. — L. V.

DEAR L. V.: It depends on what you mean by "hard." Certainly cramming calories down bird bills is more time consuming than bottle-nursing pups. Commercial milk substitutes and puppy nursing bottles have greatly simplified feeding orphan puppies. While newborn puppy care requires more in the way of peripheral activities — washing bottles, cleaning up and so on — total care time is much less than that for nestlings.

DEAR DR. MILLER: Tom Cat was a typical, neat-looking kitten. Now, as an adult, he is big, strong, smelly, dirty, and with a messy coat. To put it bluntly, he's a slob. I'm considering castration, for him, of course. Would that help or would he simply get slobbier? — W. W.

DEAR W.W.: Odds are excellent neutering will "neaten up" T.C. considerably. Without his harassed hormones he will automatically smell better and he can turn his attention to household decorum, good grooming and the like.

Pest Deterrent

DEAR ABBY: I just got interrupted for about the 200th time by some lazy salesman who insists on calling me to the telephone to give me a sales pitch.

I must answer my phone because it could be an important call, but I get furious when these pests who are trying to sell me something start in.

I have finally figured out a way to beat this system, and you can help by organizing a nationwide progam of attack. Tell your readers that when they get these calls (especially long distance), to say hello, and the minute the pitch starts, to lay down the telephone and let the person talk. When they discover that no one is listening and they have to pay for a long distance call, the method will be too expensive to continue. If you just hang up, it saves them time and money, and they go on to their next victim. — FED UP

DEAR FED: I agree, telephone solicitation is an intrusion, and I have yet to meet anyone who appreciates such calls. More oten than not, people are disturbed, inconvenienced and annoyed, which tends to antagonize them and turn them off whatever is being advertised. However, a better method of discouraging such calls is to politely tell the telephone salesman that because you have been inconvenienced, you will NOT buy his product or service.

DEAR ABBY: After 14 years of marriage and two children, I found out that my husband had a girlfriend. She was a young divorcee, and nothing special by anybody's standards. He admitted that he had been seeing her for two years. Abby, we had a good marriage and a very active sex life, so that wasn't it.

I divorced him, loving and hating him at the same time. He has been a free man for six months now and he hasn't married the other woman. What's stopping him?

My question: Why would a married man fool around and risk losing a wife who loved him, and children who idolized him, and then not jump at the chance to marry the woman who caused it all? — SIDELINED

DEAR SIDELINED: Because some married people are fascinated with "playing house" on the side. They enjoy dreaming, fantasizing, and verbalizing with a lover, secure in the knowledge that nothing can materialize because they're safely married. But after the circumstances change, and they realize that the fantasies can become a reality, the "dream" suddenly loses its appeal.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 19-year-old male college student who has recently accepted the fact that I am a homosexual. Heretofore, I had tried to convince myself that I was bisexual, but I'm realizing that I was wrong.

I never "chose" to be a homosexual. It's just what I happened to be. I was raised with (and found appealing) the idea of marrying, raising a family and living a normal life. Believe me, Abby, I wanted that more than anything. I doubt if "straight" people know of the heartache felt by those homosexuals who truly want but never can achieve this lifestyle.

Why anyone would "choose" to be gay is beyond me. I have been attracted to males ever since fifth grade, and nowhere in my sexual development do I recall "choosing" to like men instead of women. It was just a spontaneous, uncontrollable inclination I had. I was't "taught," I wasn't "molested," I've always felt this way. I have two older brothers who had the same parents and same environment, and they are "straight."

In no way do I blame myself for this. I had no control over it. Mine is a life of shame, loneliness, depression and frustration, and believe me, Abby, I did not choose it. — ACCIDENTALY GAY

DEAR GAY: I believe you, and I know that you speak for many, but you need not continue in a life of loneliness, depression and frustration. Homosexual counselling is available, and I recommend it. You desperately need to accept yourself and respect yourself. And you are as entitled to happiness and a full life as any other human being. God bless.

Craft Ideas Abound In Florida

By MAY E. MacLEAN

1028 FORT ST.
CAN TURN YOU ON

It was quite cool for Florida while I was there in January, and while I had hoped for a little warmer weather, it was delightful travelling around in my friend's Winnebago home.

Arlene and I have known each other for a number of years and we both enjoy doing needlepoint. Because her husband is a salesman for one of the U.S. yarn companies, it was very interesting visiting the various shops which carried wool, needlepoint, macrame and other craft supplies.

Naturally in Florida where so many people retire, women have a great deal of time on their hands, so that more than usual they turn to craftwork to pass the time. The store owners take a great interest in their clients, suggesting new ideas and encouraging their customers to try new crafts and techniques. There was almost a "club" atmosphere to some of the more successful shops; they looked on it as a place to drop-in, sit round a table and have a cup of coffee and a chat while discussing their project.

Afghans seemed to be the thing that everyone was knitting. I suppose this was due to the rather cool winter, plus the fuel crisis. Many of these local yarn shop owners have gained a reputation for creating their own designs, so that as their customers drop by, they are able to help them along each step of the way. It was rather a nice idea, I thought.

This was the first time I had seen my friend's Winnebago home, and I couldn't help smiling, for I thought how typical of Arlene. Crochet granny squares, a little larger-than-usual work in two shades of blue, sewn together to form a strip, were used in place of the valance above the pale blue curtains. A crochet motif square doiley was placed on the table when it was not in use, complete with a plant. She even had a small needlepoint picture adorning the wall — quite a home away from home even if it was on wheels.

Naturally we both worked on our needlepoint while Bob, her husband, was making some of his calls. I managed to complete a cover for a brick, that is the top and the four sides, working a small rose pattern design. When it is blocked and finished with an average size brick placed inside, felt will be sewn to the bottom. This makes a very decorative door-stop.

Believe it or not, Arlene was working on Christmas stockings. She had decided that each of her five grandchildren would have their own needlepoint Christmas stocking for next year, complete with their name. I am sure she will have them finished in plenty of time.

Just the right amount of pattern and color at the yoke make these pullovers suitable for both girls and boys. Knitted with the poular raglan style, you can choose between a neat neckband or a turtle-neck collar.

Perfect for sports, play or school they have been designed to be knitted with a heavier than knitting worsted weight of wool so that they will grow quickly on your knitting needles.

Four sizes are given on the instruction sheet, 6-8-10-12, all are on Leaflet No. 6921.

To order Leaflet No. 6921 send 75 cents in coin, plus a stamped, self-addressed return envelope, long one if possible. If you do not have an envelope or a stamp, please enclose an extra 25 cents to cover the cost of mailing and print your name and address. Send to: May E. MacLean, Knit and Chat, 486 Montfort Drive, Dollard des Ormeaux, Roxboro, Que.

Please be sure to state pattern numbers correctly when ordering and to enclose your stamped return envelope for faster service. Allow about two weeks for normal delivery. My illustrated catalogue of gift and bazaar items can be obtained for 25 cents, plus stamped return envelope; quilting by the square, $2.50.

Orangutans Happy

TORONTO (CP) — Metropolitan Toronto Zoo reports that Puppi, a mother orangutan, and her young son, Santan, are happy these days. When Santan was born late last fall, Puppi refused to have anything to do with him, but fortunately she changed her mind 10 days later and Santan is well-fed and developing healthily.

'Tumor' Needn't Spell Anxiety for Patient

By L. L. COLEMAN, M.D.

The words "malignant" or "benign," when used refer to a tumor, spell despair or jubilation to a patient and his family. Even the word "tumor" is responsible for anxiety, some of it based on confusion rather than understanding.

All growths of any kind, anywhere in the body, are classified as "malignant" (cancerous) or "benign" (non-cancerous").

A benign growth is one that is not harmful, remains confined to a limited area, and does not invade neighboring tissues. The benign tumor is usually surrounded by an enveloping capsule. Sometimes a benign tumor may degenerate into a malignant one and change its cellular characteristics. For this reason, even benign tumors are kept under observation by the doctor.

In some instances, a benign tumor may grow to such size that it may compress a vital organ.

Malignant tumors are invasive and tend to destroy neighboring tissues. Cells from a malignant tumor can be transported to a distant part of the body through the blood stream. The cancer cells then establish another focus in another organ. Such progresss of malignant disease is known as "metastasis."

Both benign and malignant tumors have a vast sub-classification, indicating the specific tissue in the body that is involved. For example, among benign tumors, "neuroma" is a tumor composed of nerve cells. "Lipoma" is composed of fatty tissue.. "Myoma" is a tumor of the muscle tissue.

Malignant tumors, too, have their subdivisions, depending on the tissue structure that is involved, and also depending on the particular nature of the cells of which they are composed.

Specialists in tumor suveillance (pathologists) can determine, by microscopic study (biopsy), if a tumor is benign or malignant. They can also establish how sensitive malignant cells are to X-ray teatment and to chemotherapy (drug therapy). The information they accumulate plays an important part in the decision of the doctor and surgeon as to whether an operation is indicated.

Project Seeking Active Elderly

WANTED: Eight active retired men and women, interested in meeting people, to work as a team in the development of an interesting volunteer project.

That is the word Dorothy Roberts, project co-ordinator for Victoria's Volunteer Bureau, gave me the other morning over coffee.

Once it is assembled, that team of eight people will receive some training in interviewing and public speaking.

Then they will take on the work of developing a retired seniors' volunteer corps.

There's a large retired population in the Victoria area, Mrs. Roberts said "and we believe the majority of those seniors have accumulated a wealth of skills that are of value to the community."

She also believes many of them are looking for something to fill their leisure time.

Yet, for one reason or another, "they don't seem to know about the Volunteer Bureau, or if they do know, they are unaware of the benefits they would gain by offering their services there."

Quite recently the bureau decided to make an all-out effort to reach a good percentage of these retired citizens and to give them an opportunity to help in its work.

First move, as I've already told you, is to recruit the eight people as an organizing team.

After a short training period, that team will be given the responsibility of recruiting a volunteer corps of interested senior citizens.

Each one of the eight will have a choice of speaking or interviewing assignments . . . or both.

As speakers they will present the benefits of volunteering to pre-retirement, retirement and senior citizen groups on behalf of the volunteer bureau.

Interviewers will contact potential volunteers recruited through this new seniors' project and assist them in choosing an assignment and to make appropriate referrals.

They will also make follow-up calls to the volunteers to maintain awareness of current information regarding agencies and requests.

It's important, Mrs. Roberts says, to find the eight people she is looking for, as quickly as possible.

"There is no hard and fast rule as to the amount of time any one of them would give to the project," she explains.

"They would decide themselves, choose their own hours and the length of time they wish to be involved."

Some might like to work for only three or four hours a week. Others would take on long-term commitments. Some assignments last only one or two days and are then complete.

"It's an ever changing pattern that offers continuing and rewarding activity."

Here's your chance to become involved in an interesting project within the community; to give your time and talent in the interest of being of service.

There is no doubt this project would add a new challenge to your life as a retired person, and at the same time, give you the satisfaction that comes from being needed.

Don't hesitate! If you would like to be included on that team of eight, drop in at the Victoria Volunteer Bureau, Room 204, 620 View Street and talk to Dorothy Roberts. Or phone her — the number is 386-2269.

The Victoria Volunteer Bureau is an information and referral centre for people who would like to share their time and talents with the community.

As Mrs. Roberts explains it "we recruit volunteers on behalf of a variety of organizations and individual professionals working to provide health, recreational, educational, cultural and social services.

"We are also a resource for co-ordinators of volunteer programs providing assistance in development and training.

The bureau was opened a little over three years ago, with a L.I.P. grant.

Now it is administered by the Greater Victoria Volunteer Society, headed by Alec Lee, and it is funded by the provincial ministry of human resources, the United Way and by individual subscriptions.

There is a small paid staff, augmented by 15 dedicated volunteers who do clerical work and keep records.

Mrs. Roberts showed me a list of 28 requests for volunteers needed to help with community projects, right at this moment.

They include day care centres where assistance is needed with children's programs; recreation projects asking for help in swim programs and crafts.

Volunteer entertainers are in demand for rest homes and extended care hospitals.

Community groups are looking for people to serve on boards as planners and directors and to assist with programs; a cultural centre needs guides, also people with skills in pottery, weaving, sewing and lapidary work.

Special classes need volunteers to work with individual children and group leaders are needed for youth programs.

These are only a few of the opportunities waiting out there — for you!

Star Wars Leads On Oscar Ballots

More than a barrelful of entries have already been received in the Times-CJVI Academy Award contest and there is just over one week to go.

A spot check of the ballots shows Star Wars is the heavy favorite to be named best picture.

The early entries pick Richard Dreyfuss and Richard Burton as best actor and they have Diane Keaton ahead of Anne Bancroft in the close race for best actress.

Official entry form is in the advertisement on this page.

Those who correctly predict the Oscar winners for best actor, best actress and best movie will have a chance on a trip for two to Hollywood plus 10 major secondary prizes.

All entries must be received by 4 p.m. April 3, Academy Award night, to be eligible for the contest.

In addition to the major prizes, everyone who enters will have a chance to win a double pass to a theatre party which will be held April 12 and include a free movie, many door prizes and the draw for the grand prize. Contestants do not have to be present to win the major prizes.

A total of 700 double passes will be awarded for the theatre party. The drawing for the theatre passes will begin April 4 and winners will be informed immediately.

While the early entries are mainly picking Star Wars, this wave of popular sentiment runs counter to some movie experts.

Vernon Scott, Hollywood writer for UPI, picks the Turning Point for best movie of the year.

Some others have picked The Goodbye Girl because it has two studios behind it, MGM and Warner Bros.

In Victoria, CJVI sales manager Robbie Dunn predicts Star Wars will win, while Times editor Barbara McLintock picks The Turning Point.

Local oddsmaker Louie the Greek, who has never been wrong yet, has picked a long-shot this year. In 1975 he correctly predicted One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest would sweep the boards with Jack Nicholson being named best actor and Louise Fletcher best actress.

Last year he correctly predicted Peter Finch, Faye Dunaway and Rocky.

(Louie also predicted Stephens over Carson in the Oak Bay byelection).

He had done so well there was discussion about not publishing his forecasts this year but when his choices were announced everyone laughed so hard it was decided: Why not?

His (chuckle) forecast is Annie Hall for best picture. "It's the best movie, see, so it's the winner," he said.

Louie also picks Richard Dreyfuss as best actor and Diane Keaton as best actress and both these are popular choices with other observers.

Canby of the New York Times picks Dreyfuss and Keaton, Scott of UPI picks Dreyfuss and Shirley MacLaine, while McLintock of the Times also likes Dreyfuss and MacLaine and Dunn of CJVI picks Keaton and Richard Burton "who will get the sympathy vote this year."

Burton has been nominated seven times and has never won.

FRANCO-PHONE

PORTLAND, Maine (UPI) — "Ma Bell" is giving French lessons to some of its operators in Maine and New Hampshire to help solve problems brought on by thousands of French-Canadian tourists trying to make calls in the summer months.

NET spokesman John McCatherin said the lessons were an attempt to solve problems such as the case of a French tourist who attempted to make a long distance call from a pay phone last summer but came up against a non-French speaking operator.

The operator tried to tell the man to press the phone's coin return but instead told him to "kiss the coin return." McCatherin said the result was inefficient, embarrassing and "not very sanitary."

Terrorist Nightmare Predicted

VANCOUVER (CP) — An expert on international terror from New York State University sketched for a university audience Wednesday a chilling picture of a small group of terrorists holding whole cities to ransom by poisoning their water supplies or using nerve gas and germ warfare.

Prof. Yonah Alexander, addressing about 100 persons at the University of British Columbia, said he expects the casualties of terrorism to increase dramatically as the weapons of nuclear, bacteriological and chemical warfare become more compact and available.

"It's not a joke; it's a nightmare," he said.

No one is safe from the random violence of the terrorist, he added.

"For many of the victims, their only crime is that they were at the wrong place at the wrong time."

One of the first casualties of terrorism is democracy, he said. Governments are inclined to counter terrorism with harsh anti-terrorist laws that give wide powers to police.

Alexander cited the case of the government of Uruguay's war against the Tupamaros guerrillas.

"The Tupamaros were destroyed and in the process democracy was destroyed too," he said.

Alexander said he doesn't see much help from the United Nations in fighting terrorism because there is no universal agreement on who is a terrorist.

"One man's terrorist is another man's freedom fighter," he said.

Alexander said terrorists get support from countries such as the Soviet Union that supply them with weapons, training, forged papers and safe havens. He said a lack of resolve by democracies to deal with terrorism or to punish terrorists reduces the risks that terrorists face if caught.

SOUTH PARK MEETING ON APRIL 4

People who didn't get a chance to present briefs during a South Park school closure meeting earlier this week will be able to do so April 4.

A spokesman for the Greater Victoria school board said Thursday a second public meeting is scheduled for 8 p.m. at South Park to hear a number of briefs that didn't get presented due to time limitations.

More than 10 briefs were on the agenda and time ran out before all the presenters had a chance to speak at the hearing.

The last hearing will take place April 5 at Bank Street school.

The school board will make its decisions on school closure, program shuffling and space reductions during public committee meetings April 12 and 13.

Burial Shroud Believed

LONDON (Reuter) — A documentary film opening here next week says the authenticity of the Holy Shroud of Turin, believed to be the burial cloth of Jesus Christ, can no longer be doubted.

The shroud, which is kept in Turin Cathedral and which has been displayed in public only three times in the past century, is believed by many to be imprinted with the true image of Christ.

Its history was unknown until it was found in a French village in the 14th century.

The Silent Witness, made by British director David Rolfe, says the shroud is from Palestine and quotes scientists as saying the image on the fabric could only have been made by a micro-second burst of radiation scorching the surface of the cloth.

A Swiss forensic expert, Max Frei, identifies micro-organisms on the fabric which, he says, proves it had been in Palestine, as well as France and Italy.

The weave of the cloth is also said to be consistent with its having been made in the Middle East at the time of Christ.

The imprint on the four-metre-long shroud shows only the face. But other evidence on the fabric indicates that during the crucifiction one nail was used to impale both feet while others were put through the hands.

"As an agnostic, I started out with the idea that it would be a good story to film," Rolfe told reporters. "If the shroud had turned out to be a forgery, we would still have gone ahead with it. But I have seen enough now to know that it is genuine."

The man on the shroud, he said, "was crucified in the way we are told Jesus Christ was."

By ROBERT LINDSEY New York Times

DUARTE, Calif. — The mood was both solemn and defiant Wednesday, March 15, when the Rotarians of Duarte gathered at Crystal's coffee shop, just as they do every Wednesday at 7:30 a.m.

There is just a week left before the club faces ejection from the brotherhood of Rotary International because it violated the most basic rule of Rotarianism: It accepted women members.

Three women are among the 23 local Rotarians, and they were inducted without the sanction of Rotary International. At the March 15 meeting, the men in the local Rotary club affirmed their earlier decision not to eject the women, even if the price was the loss of their Rotary charter.

"We asked these women in," said Vern Zook, a retired undertaker and the club's president-elect. With a touch of chivalry, he added:

"After we asked them in, we're not going to give them the boot. I'm not a women's libber. I just think in this day and age, Rotary International's rules are outdated."

Rosemary Freitag, a psychologist who heads a local job counseling centre, commented as she posed with Mary Lou Elliott, a local school principal, for a visiting Rotarian from Pella, Iowa, who regarded the women members as something of celebrities.

"It's not that we're a bunch of women storming the gates," she said. "They invited us in. Now, I feel it's a human rights issue, not a women's lib issue."

There are more than 800,000 members of Rotary in 17,500 clubs in 152 countries.

Millions of members have been admitted to the organization since it was founded in 1902, and many of their wives have become "Rotary-Annes" members of an auxiliary for wives.

But there have never been any female Rotarians before. And no Rotary Club has ever been ejected from the international on disciplinary grounds. The Duarte affair has proved an embarrassment and something of a crisis for the international organization.

In communities throughout the United States and in other countries, election to Rotary is a symbol of business and professional success, certification of having made it in the town. It usually is bestowed on affluent, middle-aged men.

Rotary is an organization where business contacts are made and cultivated, where comunity service projects are planned, and where, in many communities, merchants, lawyers and other members of the local leadership elite gather weekly over lunch or breakfast and discuss what is best for their towns.

Twice, in 1972 and 1977, various local chapters proposed rule changes at international meetings, calling for the admission of women. But both times the measures were decisively rejected.

John Giles, a staff executive of Rotary International at its Evanston, Ill., headquarters, said of the Duarte dispute:

"The essence of the problem is not so much whether women should be members, although that's an important issue; the problem now is that they are not abiding by the constitution." The service club's constitution, written in 1902, he continued, limits membership to "adult males."

The showdown over Rotary's eligibility regulation is occurring in a town of about 15,000 people 18 miles south of Los Angeles.

Sandwiched between Monrovia and Azusa, it is part of the great urban sprawl that begins at the San Gabriel Mountains and extends in an unbroken blanket of roads, housing tracts and shopping centres to the Pacific Ocean.

Membership in the local Rotary club has dwindled in recent years, a result, members said, of a lack of interest among young people and a growth of "mom and pop" businesses whose principals have not rushed to join Rotary.

The women, officers said, were admitted partly to deal with this membership slide. The first, Donna Bogart, a school principal, joined last April. Perhaps because the people back at Evanston who handled her application thought a man named Don had applied, no one said anything. Then, in the fall, Mrs. Freitag and Mrs. Elliott joined.

Rotary International heard about the situation and, after turning down an appeal from the club, said it would lose its charter March 27 unless the women were removed.

At the March 15 meeting in Duarte, a lawyer, a Rotarian from a nearby club, offered to represent the club without charge if it decides to wage a court battle against the International. Zook said he and other officers would meet the the lawyer and then decide whether to go to court, continue as a local service club without the Rotary organization or pursue some other action.

He said he still had hopes the International would relent "and waive rules for a very small club like ours."

"It's a do or die situation," he said. "It's survival."

Protection Near For Threatened

VANCOUVER (CP) — Canada Labor Code amendments aimed at protecting employees whose lives are threatened are expected to be introduced in the House of Commons next month, says a North Vancouver woman whose sister was killed at work two years ago.

Betty Garbutt says the Commons standing committee on labor has unanimously approved two amendments proposed by committee member John Fraser (PC-Vancouver South).

"I feel that a major battle has been won but the war is yet to come," she said in an interview. "I still have 10 provinces to deal with. It'll be a long process."

Under the new labor code proposals, employers in federal jurisdiction would be required to immediately notify police if they have "reasonable grounds to believe that any person or persons have threatened to commit, or may commit, whether or not a threat has been made, any act that endangers the life or safety of an employer or an employee."

Employees also would be required to inform their employer of such circumstances.

Garbutt said she was told by Fraser that the amendments, along with others proposed by the committee, likely will be brought to the House shortly after MPs return April 3 from their Easter break.

Fraser told her the proposed amendments went unopposed in the all-party committee and will probably get the same reception in the House, "so in effect, we won," Garbutt said.

The 28-year-old secretary said the committee was so impressed by her presentation in Ottawa that members voted unanimously to reimburse her $360 for her air fare.

Garbutt met with the committee after Fraser, Conservative labor critic, and MP Art Lee (L—Vancouver East) persuaded federal Labor Minister John Munro to intervene on her behalf.

The committee had refused to hear her brief and had finished its hearings, but Munro asked that Garbutt be allowed to present her case.

Garbutt told the committee her sister, Doreen, was fatally shot March 5, 1976, by a former employee of Facit-Addo (Canada) Ltd. after threats had been received by the company following the employee's firing.

Doreen Garbutt was office manager at Facit-Addo at the time of her death and had signed Guy-Jean Barnier's letter of termination. The B.C. Supreme Court found Barnier guilty of murder in November, 1976, but this was overturned by the B.C. Court of Appeals, which found him not guilty by reason of insanity. A further appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada is pending.

Garbutt's proposals have been endorsed by the Workers' Compensation Board of British Columbia, the B.C. Federation of Labor and the Vancouver police department.

It is a criminal offence to make threats in writing or verbally, but there is no legislation to force people who have been threatened to notify authorities.

The federal labor code covers industries such as railways, airlines, banking, trucking, broadcasting, grain-handling, communications and port operations, while most others are covered by provincial labor codes.

Traffic Death Drop

say an intensive educational and enforcement campaign reduced traffic deaths and injuries here last year. Col. Alexander Lebedev of the city's traffic department, says 500 persons were killed and 5,100 were injured — a drop of about one per cent compared with 1976.

New Stamps For Games

OTTAWA (CP) — The eleventh Commonwealth Games in Edmonton Aug. 3-12 will be commemorated with six new stamps, the post office announced Thursday.

A news release said the first two stamps will cost 14 and 30 cents each. The 14-cent stamp shows the 1978 Commonwealth Games symbol, a stylized, red and blue maple leaf against a background of silver-grey bands.

About 43 million of the 14-cent stamp and 23 million of the 30-cent stamp will be printed by Ashton-Potter Limited of Toronto. Both stamps were designed by Stuart Ash, also of Toronto.

The remaining stamps will be issued at the time of the Games.

BURIAL AT SEA CATCHES ON

The Guardian

LONDON — A Church of England clergyman who regularly conducts funerals at sea for his parishioners wants Brjtain to make greater use of its coastal waters — as a final resting place.

The Rev. Donald Peyton-Jones, 64, is a former Royal Marine and now rector of Appledore, Devon, and Lundy Island. He conducts burials miles out at sea from the deck of the local lifeboat, scattering ashes on the water or sinking weighted coffins.

"People just don't realize you haven't got to be an admiral to be buried at sea," he says. "It's normal and natural, and clearly provided for in the prayer book."

Peyton-Jones, bearded in nautical style, and well known among Devon's seafarers, takes encouragement from the scripture. "As the waters first covered the earth, he recalls, "it is surely right that we would ultimately return to the sea whence we came."

He believes the economics of begin buried inland today makes burial using the sea as a graveyard basic common sence. In the past he has been constantly visited by people who show him undertaker's bills for hundreds of dollars. The cost of burial at sea is negligible.

"We go along to the local Royal National Lifeboat Institution, use the lifeboat and all that is involved is a voluntary contribution if so desired to the RNLI. There is only the cost of the coffin or casket. The seafaring people don't charge. It is a sensible way of being buried without having to pay for all those top hats."

Many people, and not only those in Appledore, seem to agree. "I have got a whole list of people who have now said they want to be buried at sea."

The 'Parasite' Princess

LONDON — Parliament has protected Princess Margaret's good name, but criticism of her public conduct continues outside.

Left-wing MP Dennis Canavan, of West Stirlingshire, called the princess "a parasite" in the Commons but the Speaker made him withdraw the remark.

The criticism outside has reached the BBC, which carried a half-dozen brief man-in-the-street interviews, all but one of which was critical, on a late-night television show without comment.

The leftist weekly The New Statesman devoted its frontpage editorial to "what is Princess Margaret for?" and wondered how much longer she would remain honorary president of the Girl Guides.

The editorial noted that the princess's holidays with Roddy Llewellyn, 17 years her junior, while she is still married, though separated, had been criticized in the conservative press.

"This is primarily an issue for those who believe in and uphold the institution of the monarchy."

"There is a certain point beyond which the throwing open of the grounds, the sponsorship of export drives and the donning of the motley will destroy the fragile illusion of a divinity hedging the throne. With at least one member of the House of Windsor that point has long since been passed. In human terms it is possible to feel sympathy for Princess Margaret — but humanity is not what monarchy is about."

Canavan had asked in the Commons whether the government would stop "unnecessary public expenditure on the overprivileged including the $11,000 per week pocket money we give to parasites like Princess Margaret."

The Speaker told him that it is not permissible to pass derogatory remarks about the Royal Family in the Commons.

Inkspot

Kenny Dies

NEW WESTMINSTER — Bill Kenny, whose tenor voice helped make the original Ink Spots one of the world's most famous singing groups during the 1940s, has died here of a respiratory ailment.

Kenny, 63, had lived in the Vancouver area for about 25 years.

He had suffered several health problems during the past 20 years, including several bouts of bronchial pneumonia, major surgery and burns suffered in a garage fire in 1969.

Millionaire Plans TV Show on CIA

people

WASHINGTON — Texas millionaire Gordon McLendon has proposed to a wary but interested CIA that he create a weekly TV series dramatizing the cloak and dagger exploits of U.S. intelligence.

Inspiration for the show, McLendon said, was the popular FBI TV series of the early 1970s.

Produced with FBI technical advice, it portrayed the bureau as a fearsome, gang-busting guardian of the American way. J. Edgar Hoover supposedly never missed an installment.

"They want to do something like the FBI story," said a CIA spokesman, who described the agency as "non-commital" but "listening" after McLendon and former CIA agent David Phillips broached the idea to CIA Director Stansfield Turner recently.

McLendon, a former naval intelligence officer who has made millions in real estate, broadcasting and other business ventures, said, "we're at the very early stages on this and just talked to them with no commitment or endorsement on their part.

"We're targeting for next year's fall season. If this series goes at all, much of it will be done on location. We are not that far ahead yet for casting or anything else."

The general idea, he said, would be to glean real-life story ideas from the more than 2,000 members of the Association of Retired Intelligence Officers — a group formed by his colleague, Phillips.

McLendon said he is prepared to finance the TV serial himself, but would like to have the CIA screen the scripts to prevent security breeches and ensure technical accuracy.

INTERRUPTED BIKE RIDE

STOCKHOLM — The 74-year-old man says he went for a bicycle ride nearly 55 years ago. The 75-year-old woman says he interrupted his ride, and her 54-year-old daughter now knows who her father is.

In October 1923, the man was on a training round on his bicycle on the roads across turnip fields in southern Skane, Sweden. A woman working in the fields told a court this week the man got off his bike and that he is the father of her now 54-year-old daughter.

The court ruled after blood tests that he was the father, despite his denial.

It's Back to the Blues For the Last Allman

Washington Post

WASHINGTON — He sits, shorn of Cher and much of his fame, in a small brick house in Bethesda, Md.

The place belongs to Jimmy Thackery of the Nighthawks, a Washington, D.C., blues band.

Inside, a sleepy Gregg Allman is bent over a guitar. Blue jersey with orange "Tennessee" lettered on it. Jeans. White cotton socks. Also, opaque glasses. Later, when he has warmed some, he will take off the glasses and say how he's trying to get over a case of conjunctivitis.

Greg Allman, 30, should know about benders.

About cocaine, too, though he won't talk as readily about drugs as he will about alcohol. Recently, Allman says, he has been drying out in an AA-related treatment centre in the South. (He won't say where.)

He reportedly left the place to come to Washington this week to jam around town with the Nighthawks.

"I've been trying to get all the liquor out of my body," he says quietly. "It ain't easy." He says he feels better now than he has in years. During the interview he's sipping bottled water and smoking Marlboros. Endlessly.

Omelets and cherry cobbler. The two go to work as if they haven't seen food in days. "This is breakfast," grins Thackery, who looks like a Tiny Tim crossed with an Alice Cooper.

He is a serious musician who feels the Nighthawks are on the edge of fame — even if major labels seem bent on ignoring them.

"We're just jamming together," he says. "Something might come of it, something might not."

But Gregg Allman has always seemed something of an enigmatic man — the younger brother of a legend snuffed at 24. (Duane Allman, founder and leader of the Allman Brothers Band, died in a motorcycle accident in 1971.)

Thackery has them down both arms. Allman has five, including an "ABB" on his calf which he lettered himself back in the days when the Allman Brothers — according to the Playboy Music Poll, for one — were the hottest rock band in America, on their way to racking five gold and three platinum albums. That was circa 1973.

The name "Scooter" comes up.

Nearly two years ago during the summer of 1976, in a heavily guarded courtroom in Macon, Ga., Allman turned state's evidence against Herring, testifying he had purchased cocaine from him 15 times in a 16-month period.

Allman...time to dry out and think

"Aw, the times have healed all that," Allman says, waving at the question, getting up to go to the refrigerator for more ice. (He has been jumping up a lot.)

"The dude never went to jail. (Herring's bail was posted almost immediately, and he since has been out on appeal. Several weeks ago the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans overturned his conviction.) I just saw him, in fact. We spent the evening together in Macon. I bet we talked six hours."

He says though he and Scooter weren't personally in touch the past two years, he kept in communication through friends.

"All that's past now. There's no reason to talk about it. Let's talk about the blues." He reaches again for his guitar.

Mention of Cher, his third wife, bores him too. "We're still on good terms. As a matter of fact, we're still married, technically. What's to talk about?" But Elijah Blue brings a light.

"He's 20 months old, weight 30 pounds, I helped deliver him. He likes to sit in my lap and bang a piano."

Talk of the past. "Those big pop festivals used to scare hell out of me. They still do. Even last night (the night he jammed with the Nighthawks, without billing, at Georgetown's Bayou) I was scared stiff. It's a feeling that takes over your whole body. Your ankles and knees go to rubber. You can't talk. You can't think straight. You're just begging for that first song to hit."

A grin rolls up. "I remember my brother Duane and I once playing this VFW hall in Daytona where he lived — we had this little surfer band — and that same night my mother makes this whole batch of spaghetti. She said, 'You boys ain't going nowhere till you eat this dinner.' I ended up losing it off one side of the stage during a break. Now I don't even eat after 4 o'clock on a night we're gonna play."

Old Town Alexandria, Va. The bar is called the Shed, and the Nighthawks, in their first appearance here, are tearing it apart. Word has spread that Allman is to sit in tonight. By 10:30 the street is lined with fans who won't get in.

The star shows up at midnight, entering by a back door. He seems lucid and relaxed, pausing to chat with several fans.

Then he accompanies the band on organ on a half dozen hard-as-nails blues tunes. His playing is tight, nearly frenzied, his voice gut-throaty.

Afterward he is flushed and smiling. "It almost makes you never want to play another coliseum again," he says. "This is how we began."

Japanese Artist

By AUDREY JOHNSON

The grace and beauty of Japanese art in its many forms is in ascendency at the present time at the Art Gallery of Greater Victoria. In residence for several weeks (until May 13) is a foremost master of modern Japanese calligraphy in the person of diminutive Miss Kan Makiko of Tokyo.

Miss Kan has created a distinctive style which bears her name — Kan — expressed in the most delicate gradations and forms.

During the eight weeks of her residency, the artist will conduct twice weekly classes, Tuesdays and Saturdays, from 10:30 to 11:30 a.m. There is no need for previous experience in calligraphy nor is it the intent of the classes to evolve experts in the calligraphic art.

Rather one should approach the classes, says the Gallery's Joan Stanley-Baker, with a sense of discovery and for the enriching and intensifying of one's awareness of beauty in all things. Another dimension is added to life when a line or fold, a shadow, the modulation of tonal nuances, the happy relationship of one form with another, becomes a part of our conscious world.

Whenever a master teacher presents us with new vistas and sense-experiences, whether they be of taste, sight or hearing, we have gained something permanent and precious for the rest of our lives.

I am reminded of that moment in my teens when, having been a music student in a routine situation for the better part of a decade, I was suddenly confronted with a great teacher and fine pianist. In one afternoon my world was changed, like throwing open shutters to flood a dimly seen room with warm and glorious sunshine. Artistically I began to grow that day, not to become an outstanding performer but to live life more fully and to enjoy to the utmost of my potential an appreciation, not only of music, but of many things.

To tell the truth, if time permitted and no matter how inept my hand might be in manipulating the brush, I would myself be a disciple of Kan, knowing that there is no period, this side of death, to learning and to a further honing of the perceptions. For some at least of the 20 people Miss Kan's bi-weekly classes are limited to, the next six weeks could represent a rare enriching opportunity.

This week, Kan Makiko padded about the gallery in a delicious silk kimono, cocking her dainty head from side to side as she supervised the installing of an exhibition of her scrolls — some 40 of them — communicating her viewpoint in minimal English but with small gestures and such sureness and perfection of taste that the experienced gallery installation people deferred to her preference when an occasional slight difference emerged.

Her work appears in three styles: the Chinese, the Japanese of few characters and the style called "Japanese literature" in which poems are written out in their entirety. For these there is an adjustment in choice of paper, ink-water proportion and stiffness of brush to permit the most complete interpretation of the poem. Creative innovations in calligraphy have at last caught up with the advances in modernization of literature and philosophy, says Ms. Stanley-Baker, the gallery's curator of Asian Art Collections. Miss Kan, as a leading member of the new school, is sought after by architects and museum personnel, so that her works function actively in the daily lives of the people of Japan.

Ms. Stanley-Baker's own record of a fairly recent visit to Japan will form the basis of an absorbing evening at the gallery next Thursday. The board of directors has decreed that Thursday evenings, rather than Sunday afternoons, shall be free to the public, so anyone interested in getting to know more of the life and art of Japan can make a metaphorical journey without cost next week.

The curator will present a slide-lecture and two color movies — one entitled Nara and Kyoto, which explores the superb sculptures of Japan's two most ancient cities; the other, Living Arts of Japan in which are seen the work of seven contemporary artists and craftsmen in lacquer, silk-dying, ceramics, woodcuts and painting.

Lorca Drama at Pearson College

The spring production of Lester B. Pearson College's theatre group will be a Spanish play that recently had great success in New York when it was performed as a ballet. Blood Wedding, by Federico Garcia Lorca, will be seen at the Max Bell Hall at the College on the evenings of Friday and Saturday at 8 p.m. and Sunday, April 2, at 3 p.m.

Lorca, a controversial playwright of the 1930s, dealt frequently with the problems of women in tradition-ridden Spanish society; Blood Wedding is one of these plays. It is a story of a group of people caught in a whirlwind of conflict, torn agonizingly between passion and duty.

The only surviving son of a widow is engaged to the daughter of a rich farmer. The bride, however, is deeply in love with the man whose family killed her betrothed's father and brother. She elopes with him on her wedding day and the bridegroom is sent in pursuit of the couple by his mother. Under mounting tension the play culminates in a horrifying act of vengeance.

The international student body of Pearson College is represented in the cast, which includes a German, a New Zealander and two Canadians. Director is Albert Sturm, a teacher at the college who graduated in theatre at the University of Vienna.

'Love's Labour' Ends Phoenix Season

Shakespeare's mood was light, mischievous and romantic when he wrote the charming comedy Love's Labour's Lost. One of his earliest and happiest plays, there is something in it to please everyone — richness of language, song, color and wit.

This is the play which will bring to a close the current season in University of Victoria's Phoenix Theatre. It opens there on Thursday and will run through April 8, except Sunday, and with a matinee performance April 8 at 2 p.m. Curtain times otherwise are 8 p.m.

Directing Love's Labour's Lost is Harvey M. Miller, an associate professor in the theatre department.

The simple plot of Love's Labour concerns the King of Navarre and his three attending lords who vow to devote themselves solely to academic pursuits, abstaining from all earthly pleasures (including women) for a period of three years. With the arrival of the Princess of France and her ladies-in-waiting, dedication is hopelessly undermined as the men fall head-over-heels in love. And still more distraction is added with the involvement of an assortment of ridiculous comic characters.

Les Paul Turns To Technical Side

By LAWRENCE FREENY

OAKLAND, N.J. — The multitrack world of Les Paul — the blending of a sometime guitarist, composer, inventor, electronics expert, entrepreneur and full-time planner and dreamer — springs into life in Paul's home in the Ramapo Mountains here.

"I really love it out here — trees, clean air, beautiful views," he told a recent visitor. "And that stretch of hillside is like my own private mountain for climbing. Yet, I'm not far away from New York, where it's all happening.

"Some of my friends say, 'Les, why on earth are you way out there in the sticks?' Then, when they come to visit, they love it, too."

Paul was asked why, after he and his wife, Mary Ford, had made a series of records in the 1950s that sold millions of copies, he had "retired" for 10 years and then reappeared as a performer in the last two years. (Miss Ford, who was divorced from Paul in 1964, died last fall at the age of 51.)

"Well, in 1965, I put my guitar away because popular music had changed," he replied. "Rock 'n' roll was going so strong that there didn't seem to be much place for the jazz I was comfortable with.

"And in 1969, my right eardrum was accidentally punctured. Three operations didn't help much, but the fourth one, a couple of years ago, was successful. So I felt like playing again.

"Watch your step going through my workshop here," the 59-year-old musician cautioned. "It's full of wires and all sorts of stuff. Oh, this guy working at the bench is Wally, my engineer and ex-brother-in-law." (Wally Kamin was formerly married to Miss Ford's sister, Carol Summers.)

His exuberance running at full tilt, Paul led the way to the older of the two recording studios. There, he and Mary Ford perfected their performances fo major hit songs, including "How High the Moon," "Vaya Con Dios," "Mockingbird Hill" and "the World is Waiting for the Sunrise."

"Mary died the last of September on the West Coast," Paul said. "She had been in a coma for several weeks, had diabetes. I'm very sad about it, and our daughter, Colleen, who always was close to her mother, was terribly upset."

The Fords were married in 1944 — Mary's real name was Colleen Summers — and divorced 20 years later. After the divorce, Mrs. Ford returned to her native California and remarried. Besides Colleen, there is also a son, Robert Paul.

"That old fellow," Paul said, pointing to a bulky multitrack recording system of the type he perfected in 1952, "is not really the first one that Mary and I used. It's the second — it's just about like the original, which is gone now — and very soon it's going to be crated and shipped to the Smithsonian in Washington."

Miss Ford did the vocals while both she and Paul played guitar accompaniment. Rerecording and dubbing created the effect of several voices in harmony and of several guitars.

Their soaring popularity earned for the pair, and for Paul with other musicians, a total of 22 gold records for single records and 10 albums in the million-selling gold category.

The gold records, some framed and some mounted on wooden plaques, bedeck his office.

After a brief halt in his new studio and pointing out the elaborate console that controls highly sophisticated recording equipment, Paul came to a full stop in the laboratory. Here, the planner and dreamer in the musician took over from the guitarist.

Amid the clutter of wires, cables and tools were two large television sets. One, Paul said, provided the sharpest picture and best color avialable in a production model; the other is a laboratory-type set with an elaborate number of controls for fine tuning.

"What we're getting into now," he explained, "is the home taping of programs for later viewing, even while watching another show. But the next thing — and that's what I'm thinking about — is that, when you buy a record, you'll be able to rig up a sound system so that in playing it you can see the performers at work on your TV set.

"That's why we're testing these color sets in the lab. We want to get the best possible picture, because this is going to be a really big thing."

Whatever its function, each room in the Paul house contains electronic gear — the intercommunication system, radio, television, record player or some device being built or repaired. Even the bathroom has a tiny television set perched on a vanity.

$625,000 SETTLEMENT

DETROIT (AP) — General Motors Corp. and the Top Value trading stamp company have agreed to pay $625,000 to a Georgia girl who was paralyzed in a car accident when she was hurled out of her baby seat and into the car's dashboard.

A lawyer for Tammy Butler, 11, of Atlanta, had argued before the out-of-court settlement that both the 1964 Chevy II and the baby seat, which was purchased with trading stamps, were unsafe.

Canadian Films Planned

SASKATOON (CP) — Granicus Film Productions Ltd. has unveiled plans for the production of three motion pictures in Canada over the next three years. The Saskatchewan company also announced plans to construct a studio in Saskatoon.

Bohdan E. Wouk, Granicus's president and chief operating officer, said the first project would be the filming of the Trapper of Rat River, based on the story of Albert Johnson. The story is a mystery-suspense based on an event which actually occurred in the rugged Canadian northland in the 1930s.

Granicus also has purchased the film rights to James Houston's book, Ghost Fox. An initial contract has been made with actress Jane Fonda to play the role of a young woman settler captured by the Indians during the Seven Years' War.

The most ambitious project would be Mazepa, a historical epic about a 17th-century Ukrainian Cossack leader.

Canadian Brass Zesty Performers

One of the biggest things ever to happen on the Canadian music scene or, to put it more generally, in Canada's entertainment world, is unquestionably that extraordinary quintet, the Canadian Brass.

Here is a group of top-flight instrumentalists who can and do play anything from renaissance to ragtime and whose public appearances are as uniquely styled and as mirth-provoking as they are musically accomplished and exciting. Sharing an enormous sense of fun and zest, their performances go far beyond being merely another concert as they add a zany brand of theatre and hi-jinks to every show.

Those who have already met with the sound of Canadian Brass via radio, television and records have waited impatiently for a chance to encounter them live. Now, at last, under auspicies of the Victoria Symphony Society and Seagrams, they come to this city, Monday, performing at the Royal Theatre.

Their repertoire includes most of the existing music for brass and their own transcriptions of works by the masters, including organ music of Bach and compositions of Purcell, Debussy, Scheidt and Scott Joplin. The quintet's uncomplicated, demystifying manner of explaining the music and their instruments was enthusiastically received by all their audiences and led to their witty ad-libs. Soon came the more obviously outrageous commentary and then the actual commissioning of works that would be entertaining as well as musical.

Canadian (Victoria-born) composer John Beckwith contributed Taking a Stand, in which the five musicians scramble over one another for a position on the podium. Eldon Rathburn, inspired by wandering street musicians, created The Nomadic Five, a rich compendium of many musical styles, from Handel to Latin American. John Weinzweig threw in his own choreography in Fragments, in which the Brass end up in a wild sort of jam session, and Peter Schickele, eminent discoverer of PDQ Bach, created the world's first opera for brass quintet entitled Hornsmoke, which is — need it be said? — a parody of the TV western.

Chuck Daellenbach, one of the five, says they like to have fun with their performances. "We try to make any concert informal. It's not, after all, the exclusive privilege of the audience to enjoy a concert."

The Canadian Brass has toured frequently with the famed Festival Singers of Canada, appearing in England at the Harrogate Festival, at Switzerland's Lucerne Festival and at the Festival Estival in Paris. So successful were they at the latter that two years later they returned to Paris, performing there for two weeks. They also represented Canada in Washington, D.C. as part of this country's salute to the U.S. Bicentennial, and a year ago in a cultural exchange spent two weeks performing in China.

SINGING SCOTS who can outdo Alasdair Gillies are hard to find. This talented performer of Gaelic songs and ballads, noted for his popular CBC specials, is a headliner in a new touring show which comes to the Royal Theatre April 7 for a single performance. Scottish Fancy brings together as headliners Canada's own Catherine McKinnon and Bill Hosie with Gillies.

AROUND THE GALLERIES

By AUDREY JOHNSON

Paintings by local artist Harry Stanbridge and photographs by Vancouver photographer Tom Knott will occupy Open Space Gallery, 510 Fort, from April 3 through April 22.

Stanbridge will be showing recent large-scale paintings. The canvases explore the themes of celebration, texture and color. The artist has had works included in the Vancouver Island Jury Show and exhibitions in Vancouver as well as previously at Open Space. He teaches art at Spectrum Senior Secondary School.

Suggestions of elemental relationships and connections between parts of our world are expressed in Knott's rich and sensitive photography. The feelings evoked in the viewer are far more important than the subjects of the pictures, according to the artist. He likes to feel that the work is open to several interpretations.

Opening of this double show will take place from 7 p.m. to 10 p.m. on Monday, April 3, but the gallery is normally open Tuesday through Friday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

An interesting exhibition that explores the use of many materials in print, painting, drawing and sculpture is currently to be seen at one of this area's newest art show facilities — the University of Victoria Maltwood Art Museum and Gallery. The works are by 14 graduating visual arts general students of the university and demonstrate an imaginative manipulation of media, and in many instances a technical fluency that is impressive and in all cases competent.

Lighting was not fully installed at the time of a mid-week visit, which made for some unevenness of viewing, but the installation was progressing rapidly and looked as though it would be completed shortly. In other respects the gallery is pleasing as to space relationships and viewing comfort and also highly accessible as far as visitors are concerned.

It is located in the University Centre, the handsome new building that faces the Finnerty Road access to the Ring Road, entrance on to its semi-circular driveway being directly opposite the McKinnon Building and the Bank of Montreal facade of the University Services Building. There is ample underground parking and the gallery is located to the right of the main entrance, snuggled next to the still-under-wraps auditorium in the wing with the beautiful copper roof.

Title of the exhibition is Prerogatives X 14 and it will be in the gallery until Thursday, with viewing hours 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

An exhibition of hand-made rugs in the early Canadian manner will be held from Thursday through April 5 at 1318 Broad. Sponsored by Le Club Canadien-Francais de Victoria, the rugs will be on view from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. daily. All the work on exhibition is by Therese Chicoine-Palmer, a craftswoman of 30 years' experience. Admission is free.

Opening Tuesday at the Emily Carr Arts Centre, 207 Government, will be Perspectives in Graphite 1, an exhibition of pencil drawings by Norman Lock. The subjects are totems, landscapes, buildings and portraits. The showing will continue through April 7.

On display at the Centre is a gown worn at the turn of the century, being shown by the Canadiana Costume Society of B.C. A different display will be featured by the society every month. Hours at the Emily Carr Centre are 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., Monday through Friday.

Warehouse Burns

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — A spectacular waterfront fire destroyed a 30,000-square-foot warehouse and heavily damaged three smaller buildings Friday at the Pan-Atlantic Terminals, a ship repair facility, officials said. They could not immediately estimate the loss, but some said it may approach $1 million. The cause of the blaze, in which no one was injured, is still undetermined.

French Club Sponsors Rug-making Course

Rug-making will be the subject of a 10-week course being sponsored by Le Club Canadien-Francais de Victoria. The course will be conducted in French by Therese Chicoine-Palmer, who has had 30 years experience in the field.

Ten different techniques will be taught under her supervision — lacing, hooking (primitive), braiding, crochet, knitting, among others. The craft to be learned will emphasize the making of traditional rugs in the early Canadian manner, using fabric, wool, nylons and other materials, with special attention to recycling. Each participant will make a project of his choice either with new or recycled material.

Pre-registration is required for the classes which start April 12 and will be held from 7:30 p.m. to 9:30 p.m. each week. Participation will be limited. Information and registration details can be obtained by contacting Le Club Canadien-Francais, 1318 Broad, or call 383-5335.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

Astrological Forecast for Sunday, March 26
By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Personal magnetism, sensuality grab spotlight. Relationships are apt to be the opposite of casual. If you don't want to get involved, move from line of fire. Stress creativity, your own style, independence, daring originality. Leo is in picture.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Lie low; play waiting game. Listen and learn. Check legal documents. Review rights and permissions. One who counseled you in past will again be available. Aquarius, Cancer persons figure in scenario.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Highlight versatility; stress adaptability. You can expand horizons, improve working conditions, find interests in common with those who aid or serve you. Sagittarius — and another Gemini — could be in picture. Stick with number 3.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Good Moon aspect coincides now with significant changes, romance, creative energy, children, breaking free from restrictions. You begin to hear sound of your own voice. You can dance to your own tune. Know it and don't be intimidated.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Position is strengthened. You can analyze and draw valid deductions. Gemini, Virgo, Saggittarius persons are in picture. Emphasis on structure, security, conclusion of transaction. Obstacles do exist but eventually could be utilized as steppingstones.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Light touch wins — don't attempt to force your way. Social affair leads to valuable contacts. Be receptive. major adjustment occurs in domestic area. If you make intelligent concessions, you invite harmony. Otherwise, friction brings delay, embarrassment and frustration.

Superspill: It Happened

By FRANK RUTTER
Times London Bureau

LONDON — When the British government appointed the pudgy minister of sport, Denis Howell, to be in charge of preparations to fight the massive oil spill from the tanker Amoco Cadiz off Brittany, there were sighs of relief.

It is a well known fact of British life that when Mr. Howell meets a disaster it turns tail. When he was appointed minister for drought, it rained, as minister for floods he stopped the rain, as minister for snow, he stopped that, too.

Sure enough, the huge and growing slick from the stricken supertanker reversed course and headed away from mainland Britain.

This, however, is about the only funny side of a great marine tragedy, which may yet turn out to be far worse than the wreck of the Torrey Canyon in 1967. And the tide (or the wind) may yet turn against Britain, which cannot escape all responsibility because the 150,000 tonnes of oil once aboard the Amoco Cadiz was destined for England.

There is still a great deal of confusion about the main responsibility and the main cause.

But the accident which has certainly ruined the beaches of Brittany for several years is classic in almost every way.

It gives the lie, first of all, to all the expensive propaganda of the oil and shipping industries that such things are unlikely to happen. It happened.

It raises, once again, all the questions about crew qualification and training, safety equipment, and tanker design as well as shipping routes that have been under debate since the Torrey Canyon — and have still not been resolved satisfactorily.

Ironically they were all under discussion for the umpteenth time at a conference of the Intergovernmental Marine Consultative Organization in London just a month ago.

Add to those questions others involving salvage, compensation and liability (maximum $30 million), cleanup techniques, vessel traffic control and it can quickly be seen that every one of them has been unsatisfactorily answered in the case of the Amoco Cadiz.

Nothing has gone right. Not even the attempts to prevent oil aboard the stricken tanker from leaking after the accident.

In this respect the result is even worse than the Torrey Canyon which was bombed to set its cargo afire: argument and procrastination plus the unmanageable third party of the weather combined to delay a decision beyond its usefulness.

Whatever the blame there was confusion and delay from the time the Amoco Cadiz ran into trouble, lost its steering, ran aground, started leaking oil, split in two, and was abandoned.

Human, mechanical, technical and even political problems are apparent. The French government, for instance, in the last throes of an election campaign, put out a statement from the prime minister's office griping that it had not been informed until after the tanker ran aground, so how could it have helped?

Where was shore traffic control, or radar monitoring?

Then there were delays during the 18 hours between the steering failure, nine and a half miles offshore and the breakup of the tanker three and a half miles offshore. During these delays it was clear that the assistance of a single tug, even despite arguments about salvage, was insufficient.

After the grounding, efforts to mop up the oil, admittedly in awful weather, proved childishly inadequate. So much for preparedness, and emergency planning.

Some apparent effort to cope with such problems was made at the IMCO conference here in February. Canada played a major compromise role, assuring that anti-pollution measures were neither as drastic as those proposed by the Americans, nor as lenient as those sought by the Europeans, including Britain. The main concern which prompted the compromise was not the protection of people and their environment but the cost of the measures proposed.

Some crucial problems were indeed touched on at the IMCO conference: tanker design, ballast, equipment, steering, inspection, training, and radar.

But touch is about all. In the first place not one major maritime nation has yet ratified an IMCO pollution convention agreed upon five years ago.

Secondly, even if ratified, most provisions would not come into effect for several years. And thirdly, most provisions are compromises rather than the best protection money can buy.

There is to be another IMCO conference this summer to take up these questions again, and particularly crew training.

But the depressing thing is that nothing much was done after the scare of the Torrey Canyon eleven years ago, and after the Amoco Cadiz?

Perhaps IMCO would be better employed trying to find better ways of dealing with oil spills after the fact because these are demonstrably inadequate also.

Who's Responsible For Amoco Cadiz?

By PAUL TREUTHARDT

BREST, France (AP) — On the morning of March 16, the Amoco Cadiz, loaded with 65 million gallons of light Arabian and Iranian crude oil was 15 kilometres off the island of Ushant, off the tip of Brittany, bound north for Lyme Bay, on the south coast of England, and Rotterdam,.

The 1,067-foot supertanker was in the authorized shipping lane, but the weather was about as bad as any seen in 27 years at sea by Captain Leslie Maynard, a British safety training officer on board to conduct routine examinations and drills.

The wreck of the U.S. supertanker Amoco Cadiz on the French coast has caused the largest oil spill on record. Who was responsible is the subject of controversy. From a wide range of sources in Brest, Associated Press correspondent Paul Treuthardt pieced together the following account of the accident and its aftermath so far.

Because of the gale, the automatic pilot had been switched off. A man was at the wheel, his eyes moving constantly between the compass and the rudder position indicator.

At 10:45 a.m. he told Captain Pasquale Bardari: "The rudder is not answering to the helm."

The ship's engineers tried to switch to a back-up steering system. But the huge rudder was swinging so violently in the pounding seas that it was pumping hydraulic fluid out. Attempts to chain it steady failed when the heavy links "snapped like cotton."

Both systems were dead and the huge ship was helpless.

A tug fixed a tow line around 2:15 p.m. but it broke about 5:15 p.m.

Several more towing attempts failed, and at 10:04 p.m., said the log Maynard kept at Bardari's request, the tanker impaled itself on the jagged rocks off the little French fishing village of Portsall.

Helicopters took the crew off. Bardari and Maynard remained aboard for several hours and were taken off only when the ship started breaking apart.

In the days afterward more than 44 million gallons of oil spewed from the supertanker's 15 holed tanks. The spill surpassed the 1967 Torrey Canyon disaster off southwest England by at least 15 million gallons.

What happened on March 16 is a subject of controversy, conflicting statements, rumors, veiled hints, shifting of responsibilitites and what one party has called "unqualified slander."

Though the tanker broke down in French territorial waters and only about 80 kilometres from Brest, the French navy's Atlantic zone headquarters, the navy did not go on the alert.

"This was a civilian vessel; it had a tug in attendance, and when Brest Radio asked during the afternoon if further help was needed, the tanker replied specifically that it was not," said Admiral Jacques Coulondres, French commander-in-chief of the Atlantic zone.

Bugsier of Hamburg, West Germany, an international towing company, said its tug Pacific did everything possible to try to save the Amoco Cadiz, but the forces of nature defeated it.

It described as "unqualified slander" press reports that the captain of the tug, Reinhart Weiner, "malevolenty delayed his assistance" because he and Bardari could not agree on a towing contract.

Harry Rinkema, an Amoco vice-president who arrived in Brest from Chicago Saturday, refuses to "agree or disagree" or otherwise comment on Bugsier's statement, or to go into any details of what Amoco believes occurred.

He and his company's lawyers here were still saying Wednesday they had not had a chance to question Bardari fully or see the statements he made to an investigating judge who charged him with violation of France's anti-pollution act and freed him on $40,000 bail Monday evening.

But all Amoco officials here, as well as Maynard, have stressed their high regard for the competence of Bardari and his crew.

Insurance experts here generally agree that whatever the eventual legal problems, or financial transactions between Amoco, Bugsier and Smit International, a Dutch firm retained to attempt emptying what remains of the cargo, insurance coverage is not affected by the controversy over the towing.

The ship is covered for $12 million, its cargo for $20 million, and pollution insurance held jointly by international tanker owners and oil companies might run as high as $50 million, the experts said.

Suicides Laid To Yankee Values

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — The proud and stubborn Yankees of northern New England have the highest suicide rate in the U.S. because of the same personality traits that have earned them a place in American folklore, mental health experts say.

And they say the slow-melting snows of early spring again are bringing suicides in the region to a peak.

In 1977, the estimated suicide rate for the U.S. was about 12.5 deaths per 100,000. In Vermont, the rate was 21.4; in New Hampshire 19.3; and in Maine 17.6, says the department of health, education and welfare. No other region has so high a rate.

"It's the old Yankee value system that makes this part of the country the most difficult in which to prevent suicides," said Andy Loman of the Mental Health Center in Bangor, Maine.

The typical New Englander in the country north of Boston is pictured as frugal and obstinate. While these idiosyncrasies may make Yankees good businessmen, it also makes them uncooperative patients, doctors say.

"It's the Yankee version of the stiff upper lip," said Dr. Stephen Soreoff, director of emergency psychiatry and Portland's Maine Medical Centre. "They try to keep it all in, try to be strong; hide their feelings until they do something drastic — like kill themselves.

"They feel that to get help for their depression or mental problems is not only wrong, but a symbol of weakness." Dr. Soreff said. "The admission of needing help is against the Yankee mentality and people are dying because of it."

Dr. Elizabeth Forsberg, a Vermont psychiatrist, said old people are more likely to choose suicide over professional help.

The experts agree that winter depression traditionally peaks as spring starts. The long cold is about over. People are sick of the dirty snow. Holiday and fuel bills are coming in. Property taxes are due.

"It happens every spring," said Charlotte Sanborn of the Dartmouth Medical School in Hanover, N.H. "People somehow make it through the cabin fever and the mud season and have high hopes that spring will make everything better.

"But when spring finally gets here and everything else blooms and the depressed person doesn't, suicide is all too often their answer."

Lure of the South Appeals to Cabinet

The prime minster joins other federal cabinet ministers who have gone south for holidays during the Easter parliamentary recess, ignoring Finance Minister Jean Chretien's advice to Canadians to keep tourist dollars to help ease the balance-of-payments debt. That debt is expected to be about $2 billion for 1977.

But Chretien's parliamentary secretary, Ed Lumley (L—Stormont-Dundas), is ignoring his boss's advice and taking a vacation outside Canada. His office would not say where.

Others surveyed by The Canadian Press were:

Progressive Conservative Leader Joe Clark and NDP Leader Ed Broadbent in Florida and the Bahamas respectively.

House Speaker James Jerome, Florida.

Employment Minister Bud Cullen, already in Trinidad and stopping in Barbados before returning to Ottawa April 3, the day Parliament resumes.

Tony Abbott, minister responsible for small business, spending the three-day Easter weekend in the Bahamas, returning to work March 27.

Environment Minister Len Marchand in Barbados.

Supply Minister Jean-Pierre Goyer in the Caribbean "building up strength for an arduous spring," his office said.

Fisheries Minister Romeo LeBlanc, out of the country somewhere, said his office.

Going out of the country on government business: Defence Minister Barney Danson, to the United States; State Secretary John Roberts to Israel; Revenue Minister Joe Guay to Japan and Korea.

The remaining 23 cabinet ministers are on vacation in Canada spending time in their ridings, or working, the survey showed.

Liberal whip Gus MacFarlane's secretary said he was out of town, but would not say where.

Ray Perrault, Liberal house leader in the Senate was going home to Vancouver. "He wouldn't dare" take a vacation outside Canada, his secretary said.

James McGrath (PC—St. John's East) said he is staying in Canada. "I can't afford to go any place else.

Crackdown On Hiring Of Canadians

VANCOUVER (CP) — The federal employment and immigration commission will begin routinely enforcing its hire-Canadian regulation next month, says Richard Cruchley of the commission's executive and professional division.

He said Canadian employers who want to hire a foreigner must first contact Canada Manpower which will decide how extensive a search for a qualified Canadian must take place first.

The job description will be sent to other Manpower offices which will forward applications to the original office where a counsellor will discuss them with the employer. The search is expected to take 30 to 60 days, Cruchley said.

Employers may be required to interview prospective employees from other parts of Canada, he added. Manpower will pay transportation costs for applicants for long-term jobs, but the employer may be required to pay the fare of applicants for temporary jobs.

On March 6, Bud Cullen, federal minister of manpower and immigration, said Robbie Sherrell, an American, would be permitted to take over as president of the Insurance Corporation of British Columbia, even though the minister felt a proper search for a Canadian had not been carried out.

In a dispute over whether a qualified Canadian applicant exists, the commission will decide, Cruchley said.

STUDENT FOUND

A 19-year-old University of Victoria student who vanished after walking away from Royal Jubilee Hospital on March 19 has been located in the city.

IT WILL BE KORCHNOI v. KARPOV

The battle royal in Belgrade, Yugoslavia, took almost two months, as Boris Spassky, an ex-World Champion who has been living in France for the past six months, took on Viktor Korchnoi, another Russian Grandmaster, but one who has decided to leave his native land for good.

They were playing the final match of the Candidates to determine who would face Russia's World Champion Anatoly Karpox for the world title this spring.

It was a battle of surprises. At the beginning, it looked like a walkaway as Korchnoi race through to a 7½-2½ lead, only 10½ points being needed to win. Then Spassky, like a Russian bear emerging from hibernation, stretched his muscles and threw a scare into his opponent. He won four games in a row — and suddenly the match was 7½-6½. The chess world was agog. But then Spassky, a very popular man, disappointed his followers. He tied two games, making it 8½-7½, and then lost two to put Korchnoi over the top.

The tension was particularly noticeable as Spassky was closing the gap. In the 13th game, shown below, Korchnoi just gave his Queen away, something almost unheard of in a game of this importance. After Game 13, Korchnoi, though still leading, threatened to abandon the match unless the organizers excluded the public and removed a demonstration board showing the position after each move (Spassky was using it to plot his strategy). The board remained, but the first ten rows of seats nearest the battleground was removed, a partial victory for the tense Korchnoi.

HANDICAPPED AID BOOSTED

Handicapped persons and their families who receive social assistance will be given an additional $20 a month from the provincial government effective July 1.

Human Resources Minister Bill Vander Zalm said the new rates bring the basic benefits for a single recipient of assistance to $285 a month and increase the rate for a family of four to $655 from $635.

Vander Zalm said the increase will affect more than 11,000 people and is expected to cost more than $2 million for the nine-month period of the fiscal year 1978-79.

He noted that both single and family recipients of the handicapped assistance also receive special rental subsidies, pharmacare and medical benefits.

The last change to handicapped assistance came last July when single recipients were given a housing allowance of up to $57 a month and families were given an across-the-board $50-a-month increase. A free homemaker service was also set up last summer.

Socred Pull Freed Polluter

VANCOUVER (CP) — Arthur Balcombe, a former provincial conservation officer, says he was warned by his supervisor in Victoria not to prosecute a polluter in the Vanderhoof area because he was a contributor to the Social Credit government of W. A. C. Bennett.

In a transcript of a March 16 hearing into the issuing of guide outfitters' licences by the fish and wildlife branch, Balcombe said he was told "to lay off" during a telephone conversation with his supervisor, Zig Withler.

Balcombe, responding to cross-examination by Bill Otway, president of the British Columbia Fish and Wildlife Association, said he was advised not to act after he discovered a stream that was being contaminated by silt from a mining operation about 300 kilometres north of Vanderhoof in the B.C. Interior.

Balcombe, who retired from the fish and wildlife branch in 1968 and now lives in Penticton, said as soon as he returned to Vanderhoof from his patrol he received "a phone call asking me if I was going to prosecute this company."

"And I said 'yes, I was', and was told to lay off because they were contributors to the Social Credit government," he said. "I decided it was time to get out if this was a political football."

A date for a resumption of hearings has not been set.

Report Confuses Sex Shop Owner

Some of the language in the Commons justice committee's report on obscenity is so all-embracing the owner of Victoria's only sex store is wondering whether he'll have any business left at all.

Proprietor Kelly Covin, who opened the Garden of Eden boutique in Nootka Court more than four years ago and sells sexual aids, lotions, clothing, publications and other items, said Thursday he is particularly puzzled by one of the committee's specific recommendations.

This urges that police forces in Canada and the U.S. begin a vigorous campaign to detect, apprehend and prosecute those involved in the production, manufacture, distribution, importation and sale of sexually explicit material.

Said Covin: "That seems to cover the entire ball game."

The committee said the aim of the operation should be to dismantle criminal networks which make immense profits from such material.

"If they're after the distribution end, then everything is going to dry up."

But he said he will have to study the committee's report in detail before he can properly assess the potential impact on his business should the recommendations be implemented.

He said he is also confused because another committee recommendation appears at odds with the one advocating the comprehensive police crackdown.

In this, the committee recommended that provincial, regional and municipal authorities adopt licensing, zoning and child protection laws and regulations to ensure discreet advertising, display or sale of sexually explicit material to adults.

Covin said the Garden of Eden has always been discreet in its merchandising approach.

For example, the windows are draped, magazines are secured by bindings and no juveniles are admitted to the premises, where a sign clearly identifies the nature of the business conducted.

A-G's REJECTION ON PORN STUNS

Attorney-General Garde Gardom has been criticized by school board chairman Susan Brice for rejecting a classification system for pornographic literature.

She said Gardom didn't even bother notifying the school board of his decision.

"I was stunned to hear the attorney-general reject the proposal on a radio broadcast Thursday," she said.

She said she made almost daily contact with Gardom's secretary to get an appointment to discuss the proposal.

But she was told the attorney-general would meet the school board when his busy schedule permitted.

The board would like to see pornographic literature classified in a way similar to the classification system now employed for movies.

Stamp Charges

A 60-year-old Victoria man faces a criminal charge after an incident in Colwood this week when a man ordered bank cheque certification stamps through a Colwood firm.

Colwood RCMP said the man, whose name has not been released, has been charged with possession of an instrument to be used for forgery.

Company manager William Rowdy told police March 17 a man had placed an order for two stamps for the Bank of Montreal and Royal Bank of Canada.

Officers were waiting when the man appeared on Friday and took him into custody.

He was released on an undertaking to appear in provincial court at a later date.

BLOODY CIVIL WAR FEARED

War Clouds Thickening In Rhodesia

By DAVID OTTAWAY
Washington Post

SALISBURY — Black and white leaders in Rhodesia have now set in motion a course of events that has a better than even chance of touching off the worst civil war in southern Africa's history, with a high potential for again drawing in all the outside forces that confronted each other in the Angolan conflict.

While no one here is giving very good odds on the survival of the new multiracial transitional government set up this week, most seem ready to bet heavily that the worst fighting in the six-year-old guerrilla war — which has already taken up to 9,000 lives — is about to break out. In addition, it is now taking on the character of a black-against-black struggle for power.

At stake is not only which black faction will rule the new Zimbabwe, but whether this minerally and agriculturally rich land will be socialist or capitalist, Eastern or Western, in orientation.

The war clouds are already thickening. Hundreds of Nationalist guerrillas are pouring in from Mozambique and Zambia to do battle against the transitional government. There are unconfirmed Rhodesian and South African reports of a new major buildup of Soviet arms and Cuban personnel in Mozambique, and the first indications that South Africa may be ready to step up its military assistance to Rhodesia.

The United States and Britain have launched an 11th-hour diplomatic offensive to persuade all of Rhodesia's warring and rival parties to attend one last peace conference. But none has shown interest, leaving the African "front-line" states and South Africa as the West's last hope for forcing a meeting of the nationalist leaders in the transition government and those outside the country.

This explains a sudden front-line summit meeting in Dar es Salaam announced for this weekend. The meeting was called after Tanzanian President Julius Nyerere met Tuesday with U.S. Ambassador Andrew Young, who is leading the Western peace initiative in southern Africa now and wants to use the occasion to meet informally with the five front-line presidents.

Meanwhile, the transitional government, under the combined leadership of white Prime Minister Ian Smith and three locally based black leaders, is about to launch a major campaign to win the hearts and minds of the 10,000 to 20,000 guerrillas fighting under the banner of the externally based Patriotic Front.

If the campaign succeeds, or even half succeeds, the transitional government should give birth to full black majority rule at the end of this year, almost certainly under the moderate pro-Western leadership of Bishop Abel Muzorewa.

Much now depends on this Methodist bishop, whose past political record of indecision and hiding in the face of crisis is the cause of much concern among his black and white supporters today. A respected religious and political leader among the

Israelis In State Of Shock

Times News Services

JERUSALEM — Israel is in a state of shock today following the sharp and open confrontation between U.S. President Jimmy Carter and Prime Minister Menachem Begin in Washington earlier in the week.

An uneasy sense that something fundamental is going seriously wrong pervaded the Israeli capital, affecting politicians and ordinary citizens alike.

Leading newspapers have called on the government to re-assess its policies and opposition leaders are reported planning to meet on whether to call for Begin's resignation.

The Democractic Movement for Change, which contributes 15 votes to Begin's governing Likud coalition in the Israeli parliament, or Knesset, also is expected to reassess its legislative support of Begin.

In Washington, U.S. State Secretary Cyrus Vance refused comment on the "internal affairs of Israel" but told reporters that the drive for a Middle East peace is "much slowed down."

Begin returning home from three day of talks with Carter Friday denied there was any crisis in his government.

Looking weary, he told an airport news conference: "I will do my best to put our house in order."

Asked about reports that the Carter administration wants him replaced by Defence Minister Ezer Weizman, a moderate, Begin said: "The prime minister of Israel is elected by the people of Israel, not by the diplomatic representatives of the United States."

In Cairo, the semi-official newspaper Al Ahram says Carter and President Anwar Sadat will have "urgent consultations" on steps to be taken in light of Begin's trip to Washington.

However, the authoritiative newspaper does not say whether the two leaders will meet in person or through their representatives.

Carter will be in Africa next week on an official visit.

U.S. Ambassador Hermann Eilts met with Sadat today for what the embassy said was a routine briefing on Begin's round of talks with Carter.

The United Nations, meanwhile, deployed hundreds of peacekeeping troops in southern Lebanon today and Syria dealt a potentially devastating blow to the Palestinian guerrilla movement by announcing that it was cutting off supplies of weapons and equipment and moving to halt any unauthorized military movements toward the Israeli-occupied border zone.

The move was seen as a strong sign Syria would cooperate with the international peacekeeping efforts.

More countries prepared to send in troops to build up the UN force to its proscribed 4,000 men.

By Friday, UN sources said about 25 per cent of the force had arrived, including 512 French, 259 Iranians, 250 Swedes and 11 Canadians.

UN officials said about 700 of the troops had already been deployed — the French near the southwest port of Tyre, the Iranians in the central section of the Israeli-Palestinian lines and the Swedes in the east.

The Palestine Liberation Organization said its forces had answered "heavy enemy shell and rocket fire" Friday on the south central town of Nabatiyeh, nine miles north of the Israeli border.

However, Western correspondents who toured the south reported general calm and said the four-day ceasefire in the area appeared to be generally holding.

Ransom Ambush Ends in Shootout

PARIS (UPI) — French police ambushed the kidnappers of industrialist Baron Edouard-Jean Empain near the pickup site for a record $8 million ransom Friday night and shot it out with them in the middle of an Easter holiday traffic jam.

One gangster was killed, another was slightly wounded and three escaped in the maze of cars. Two policemen also were hurt.

There was no sign of the 40-year-old baron, president of the $4.5 billion-a-year Empain-Schneider conglomerate. He was kidnapped Jan. 23 as he was driving to work from his Paris apartment.

A spokesman at Paris police headquarters said one of Empain's associates drove to a rendezvous to deliver a ransom of 17 million Swiss francs — $8 million — at a telephone booth along the crowded south Autoroute between Paris and Orly Airport.

Police were waiting in ambush and opened fire on the kidnappers when they arrived. But three of the five managed to escape in the confusion of the rush hour traffic, the spokesman said.

They did not get the ransom money — almost double the record amount paid out in a previous kidnapping.

Both the wounded gangster and his slain comrade were identified as members of the Paris underworld with long police records. This appeared to put an end to theories that the kidnappers were Italian professionals or German urban guerrillas.

The captured man was taken to police headquarters and was being interrogated today.

The police spokesman said the business associate parked his car next to the telephone booth as instructed and got out. Two men wearing hoods suddenly leapt from some nearby bushes, jumped into the car and sped off, police said.

They jerked to a halt about 500 yards up the highway, where three other kidnappers carrying submachineguns joined them.

At that point, the police closed in and shooting started.

It was not immediately clear whether Empain's family knew that police had learned of their plans to pay the ransom and had set a trap for the kidnappers.

Empain's elderly chauffeur, who was pistol-whipped in the June kidnapping, told police at the time that his boss disdained bodyguards, explaining, "He had no fear."

Empain himself once remarked, "I'm an optimist by nature."

Midwest Encased In Ice

United Press International

An Easter-weekend ice storm encased the Midwest in ice today, shutting down major highways, stranding motorists and halting air traffic at the world's busiest airport.

At least eight persons have been killed in the latest surge of bitter, wintry weather. Indiana, Oklahoma and Missouri each reported two storm deaths and Illinois and Iowa each reported one.

The storm pushed eastward, prompting travel advisories and storm warnings fo parts of Ohio, Pennsylvania and Maryland, where freezing rain and sleet hampered Easter travel.

Freezing rain, snow and high winds crippled Chicago, closing O'Hare International Airport — the world's busiest — stopping elevated trains and transforming expressways into ribbons of ice.

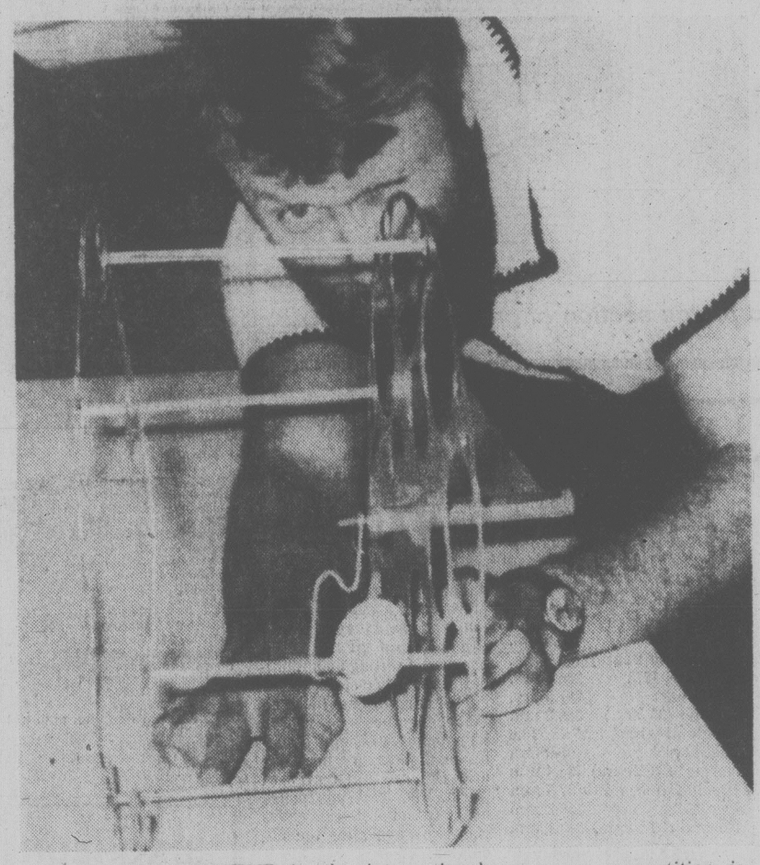
A thick glaze of ice covered runways at O'Hare Airport, forcing the huge air terminal to shut down for only the fourth time in its history.

One stretch off Interstate 57 on Chicago's South Side was closed. Police reported "hundreds" of accidents along one three-mile strip of highway. Authorities said as many as 50 cars were involved in one chain-reaction series of pileups.

Ice caused scattered power outages along Chicago Transit Authority elevated lines.

A winter storm warning was posted for Chicago and up to four inches of new snow was forecast.

Snow and ice spread over a wide swath off the midlands from Kansas City to Indianapolis.



EARLY EGGCITEMENT in the international egg race competition is created by Ron Miller of Maple Leaf, Ont., who set world record with distance of 130 metres with this contraption. Device, which is powered only by rubber band, rolls along flat surface powered by weight of the egg. Victoria will have its egg race April 15 and local inventors, hopefully, will come up with devices that will break Miller's record.

Marsha Given Chance

Marsha Mason rounds out the field in the race for the Oscar for best actress this year.

Most Hollywood observers rate her fourth or fifth out of five candidates but they add the vote will be so close it would not be a big upset if she won.

The Times and CJVI are offering a chance on a weekend for two in Hollywood plus 10 runner-up prizes for those correctly predicting the Academy Award winners as announced on April 3. Official entry form and more information will be found today on page 37.

Marsha Mason was nominated for her performance opposite Richard Dreyfuss in Goodbye Girl. Dreyfuss is a major contender for best actor and many critics believe his performance was the outstanding element in the movie.

The Goodbye Girl was given five nominations, including one to child star Quinn Cummings as best supporting actress. It was also nominated best picture and best screenplay.

While Mason's performance was not rated as sensational, the movie was jointly released by MGM and Warner Bros., which puts a lot of potential Academy votes behind it. The race is expected to be very close.

NO SMALL CHANGE IN METER CAPER

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Nine employees who collect coins from San Francisco's parking meters and their supervisor have been accused of stealing at least $3 million in coins during a six-year period.

Six other employees of the 17-member department were booked for investigation of embezzlement by working only four hours a day, although they were paid full-time salaries.

The only department employee not booked Friday was one who had been working there only five weeks.

District Attorney Joseph Freitas said Melvin Wilson, 38, supervisor of the crews that emptied the meters, is believed to have carted home $1,000 a day himself "when he worked."

Among the 10 employees booked for investigation of pocketing meter money was one who an assistant district attorney said is believed to have taken $60,000 to $80,000 a year.

Freitas estimated the workers' illicit take from the meters was at least $500,000 annually, about 25 per cent of all the coins fed into them each year.

He said some of those arrested "were in the habit of taking a handful of coins from the piles in the sorting room at city hall" while others took sackfuls home.

Freitas said the scheme allowed employees to buy "some pretty grand cars" despite annual salaries of $10,000 to $15,000 a year.

Blaze Guts Sumas Block

Victoria firemen are trying to determine the cause of a fire that broke out in a commercial building in the 400-block Sumas Friday causing more than $400,000 damage.

Seven businesses with offices in the single storey building were damaged in the blaze, reported by nearby residents at 1.42 p.m.

Fire investigator Lt. Alec Satchwell said two of the businesses — Copytron, a supplier of copy machines, and Pacific Controls, a supplier of heating and air-conditioner control devices — were gutted.

The other five businesses, Totem Welding, National Cash Registers, Orion Products, Bob's Appliances and Dendco, a dentist supply firm, had smoke and water damage.

Satchwell said the fire was so extensive it is difficult to pinpoint exactly where it started.

Meanwhile Central Saanich police are investigating the death of a 60-year-old man whose badly burned body was discovered Thursday lying across the fireplace hearth in his home at 7313 Veyaness.

By WALTER PINCUS
Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Nine years ago, the U.S. government told the Bikini Islanders it was safe to return to their atoll, once the site of nuclear weapons tests in the Pacific. And some of the islanders went home.

Now the government has found that it was wrong. According to tests last year, the ground water in Bikini is still too radioactive for human consumption.

So are coconuts and fruits and vegetables grown in the still contaminated soil.

So the Interior Department quietly has asked Congress for $15 million to move the islanders to another home.

"It is now clear," Interior told a Houses representative appropriations subcommittee, "that for the forseeable future the island of Bikini in the atoll should not be used for agricultural purposes, particularly for local consumption, and should not be considered a residential area."

The approximately 100 Bikinians now living on the island "are being carefully monitored," Interior said. "A feeding program has been provided for them and they are not consuming locally-grown food."

Higher than normal concentrations of radioactive elements taken into the human body in food or water over long periods have been associated with the occurrence of leukemia and other cancers.

None of the present Bikini residents, according to Interior officials, appears yet to have become ill from living on the island.

Nonetheless, the Bikini situation will take place as part of the continuing controversy among scientists both inside and outside the government on the long-term health effects of low-level radiation.

It has further significance: the high residual radiation levels in the soil, and its uptake by plants 23 years after exposure, may influence military planners as they explore the prospects of using tactical nuclear weapons in even a limited manner in western Europe.

Interior officials who manage the U.S. Trust Territory in the South Pacific, which includes Bikini, are asking congress for $6 million in fiscal 1979 to begin a proposed new $15 million program to try again to relocate the Bikinians who were moved off their atoll to make way for the nuclear weapons tests.

Some $3 million has already been spent on bringing them back to Bikini.

The entire island was plowed up, topsoil removed, 50,000 new coconut trees planted and 40 new homes built.

"All that will be abandoned," Ruth Van Cleve, Interior's director of territorial affairs, said today.

48 Killed

RANGOON (AP) — All 48 persons aboard a Burmese airliner were killed today when the plane exploded and crashed in flames in a rice paddy shortly after takeoff from Rangoon airport.

Coach Depot Breakin Nets Year in Prison

A 35-year-old Victoria man was sentenced Thursday to one year in prison for breaking and entering with intent to commit an indictable offence Dec. 13 at the Vancouver Island Coach Lines depot, 710 Douglas.

"One of these days you have to stop behaving in this fashion," Judge E.J.C. Stewart told Joseph Marcel Risi, convicted by a county court jury Monday night after a four-day trial.

Risi was on probation for breaking and entering with intent at another Victoria commercial premise at the time of the latest offence. He was also fined $1,200 for the earlier offence.

Judge Stewart said Risi had placed the court in the position where it had no choice between jail and a fine and the only question was how long in jail.

Risi has a criminal record going back to 1959 in Montreal, including five car thefts, three breaking and enterings with intent, two attempted car thefts, and possession of an offensive weapon, failure to remain at an accident, robbery with violence, resisting arrest, dangerous driving, driving while disqualified, assault causing bodily harm, conspiracy and possession of housebreaking instruments.

He was sentenced to two years in jail for his first offence, a car theft, and for his second breaking and entering with intent, in Montreal in 1971, he was sentenced to four years in penitentiary.

He also said Risi must have impressed a Victoria probation officer in a favorable pre-sentence report of a year ago and it seemed he had also impressed a provincial court judge who imposed a fine and probation for breaking and entering with intent despite a lengthy record.

Judge Stewart said he thought alcohol had a lot to do with the current case and it was a stupid breakin. He also said Risi was fortunate to have a good family.

TB Declines

OTTAWA (CP) — Statistics Canada said Thursday there were 3,143 reported cases of new active or reactivated tuberculosis in 1976, down from 3,551 a year earlier.

The rate per 100,000 of population was 13.7 in 1976 compared with 15.6 in 1975.

Of the tuberculosis cases reported, nearly one third or 1,014 involved immigrants.
